And also the following branch ditch designated as branch B, Viz:—Commencing at the quarter post on the south boundary line of section 24, in township 154, range 39, thence in a westerly direction on and along the section line south of sections 24, 23, 22, 21, 20 and 19, in said last mentioned township and range to the southwest corner of said section 19, and thence north on and along the section line west of section 19 and 18, in said last mentioned township and range and emptying into said branch A, above petitioned for as its outlet.

And your petitioners further petition and request that if better results for the drainage of the area affected can be obtained by a different course, source or outlet of the main or branch ditches herein petitioned for, that the engineer appointed in this ditch proceeding designate such different source, course or outlet, and that such source, course or outlet, therefor designated by the engineer be adopted, and that if necessary for the drainage of the area affected, different and other branches be designated and be laid out by the engineer and established by the Court herein.

And your petitioners further represent that the proposed outlet of the ditch herein petitioned for is County Ditch twenty (20) in Marshall County, Minnesota, and that your petitioners having duly made application and petition to the County Board of the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota for permission to empty the drainage ditch herein petitioned for into said Marshall County Ditch number twenty (20) and have petitioned said County Board to fix the terms and conditions whereon such premission shall be granted and your petitioners request that after permission be granted and the terms and conditions thereof be fixed by the said County board, that the Judge herein order compliance with such terms and conditions and that the costs and expenses thereof be paid out of the ditch fund of the said ditch herein petitioned for.

HOSTS OF GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC IN GREAT PARADE

Spectacular Review Is Climax of the Forty-third National Encampment, in Salt Lake City---Veterans Are Warmly Received and Well Cared For in Utah's Capital.

Salt Lake City, Aug. 11.—To-day was the climax of the forty-third national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, the day on which the men who nearly half a century ago fought to preserve the union once again fell into line, answered the roll-call, and marched bravely, though often with faltering steps, to the music of the fife and drum.

Never in all the years of its existence has the Grand Army had a national encampment review that surpassed the one of to-day in spectacular and pathetic features. The parade formed at the beautiful Eagle gate on South Temple street. First in line were the regulars of the Fifteenth United States infantry and the entire National Guard of Utah, acting as escorts. Next came the forty-four departments of the Grand Army of the Republic, the Naval Veterans, the Ex-Union Prisoners of War, and in carriages the surviving members of that devoted band of women, the Army Nurses.

Scattered through the line were numerous military bands and fife and drum corps.

Greeted with Cheers and Tears.

At the word of command the parade marched west to Main street and turned south down that thoroughfare, proceeding seven blocks between solid walls of cheering men, women and children. As the grizzled veterans passed the enthusiasm was tremendous and many a spectator wept unashamed as he realized that this was undoubtedly the last grand review for scores of the feeble heroes who trudged along with eyes on the flag for which they had given some of the best years of their lives.

When Seventh South street was reached the paraders themselves broke out in mighty cheering, for there they turned in front of the most beautiful feature of the day, the "Living Flag." On an immense stand were 3,600 children dressed in the national colors and so arranged that they made a perfect representation of a waving American flag.

The little ones had been drilled for many weeks, and while the old soldiers passed they sang patriotic airs.

At the Reviewing Stand.

City and County Building.

South Temple street. Here, just to the left of the Brigham Young pioneer monument and close to Temple square, the reviewing stand had been erected. It was occupied by Commander-in-Chief Henry M. Nevius, Gov. William Spry of Utah, the chief executives of other states and a large number of other officials and distinguished guests. The parading bodies all passed in review, saluting those in the stand, and at once disbanded. All the bands as they arrived here were massed close to the stand and as the culmination of the parade, 4,000 school children marched by, the united bands playing and the children singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

The great review was excellently managed in every way. All along the line of march were scattered ambulances, trained nurses and numerous other attendants to care for any of the veterans who might be overcome by fatigue and for spectators who suffered in the crush on the sidewalks. Fortunately, their services were seldom needed.

Fireworks on a Mountain.

After a good rest, the city's guests all turned out again this evening and witnessed the magnificent display of fireworks on the top of Ensign peak. This peak lies immediately north of the city and is the highest point of the Wasatch mountains, rising 1,200 feet higher than Temple square. The pyrotechnic display is a mighty feature of the encampment week.

Salt Lake City has thrown open her arms to the old soldiers, and never has the Grand Army been more enthusiastically received or more generously entertained than at this encampment. Many thousands of the veterans and their families and members of all the organizations allied to the Grand Army have participated in the exercises and entertainments, and are unanimous in their praise of the Veterans Well Cared For.

The old soldiers have been very carefully looked after by the local committees on public comfort and private accommodations and at the [illegible] information bureaus at the various railway stations and convenient places about the city. During the entire time of the encampment these committees have had the services of 300 high school cadets, whose duties have been to render every possible assistance to the visitors.

The decoration of the city has been on a lavish scale. Every prominent building has been elaborately draped with bunting, handsome arches span the streets, and there is scarcely a residence in the city that does not display at least a flag.

Henry M. Nevius, the commander-in-chief, arrived here Saturday with his staff and inspected the arrangements. On Sunday the city's guests began arriving by the thousand, and on Monday they came in so fast that the committee had to work like sailors to get them all housed in such a manner as to avoid congestion in any part of the city.

Big "Greetings" Meeting.

Monday evening came the first public event on the program—a great camp-fire in the assembly hall in the Temple grounds. All that night and throughout Tuesday the stream of arrivals continued, but by Tuesday evening practically all the visitors had been received and distributed. That night the greatest function of the encampment took place. This was the "Greetings" meeting in the Mormon Tabernacle. The immense building easily seats 10,000 persons, and it was filled to its capacity.

Col. Frank M. Starrett, the executive director of the encampment, called the vast assemblage to order and introduced William H. King of Salt Lake City, who acted as temporary chairman. He made a brief address and was followed by Gov. William Spry of Utah, Mayor John S. Bradford of Salt Lake City, and L. H. Smythe, commander of the department of Utah, all of whom told in eloquent words how proud they were to welcome to the state and city the Grand Army and their friends.

Mr. King then introduced Commander-in-Chief Nevius, who was received with wild cheering and the waving of hats and handkerchiefs. As soon as the tumult had subsided, Commander Nevius delivered a graceful response to the welcoming speeches and took the chair.

The Allied Organizations.

Then came the turn of the allied organizations, and greetings to the veterans were uttered by President Genevieve Hagar Longfield Lane of the Ladies of the G. A. R., President Mary E. Gilman of the Woman's Relief Corps, President Clara E. Hoover of the Daughters of Veterans, Commander-in-Chief Edgar Allen of the Sons of Veterans, and President Rebecca Smith of the Army Nurses. The speechmaking was varied by the playing of patriotic airs by a band.

The exercises were brought to a close by the presentation of a handsome testimonial to Charles G. Burton, past commander-in-chief of the Grand Army.

Head On, Only.

Any remark which might possibly be construed into unfavorable criticism of his old master or any of his belongings is instantly resented by Pomp, an old southern negro. A young granddaughter from "up nort" was looking over the family portraits and commenting freely, while Pomp stood, a sable image, at her side.

"I don't think much of that horse's tail," said the girl, nodding her head toward a portrait of her spirited ancestor seated on the horse which carried him through the civil war. "It looks rather moth-eaten to me."

Metal Schedules Are Lower—Duty on Rough Lumber Changed from $2 to $1.25 per Thousand Feet—Sugar and Tobacco Schedules Remain Substantially as Under the Dingley Bill—Little Change in Wool Duties.

Washington.—Tariff rates under the new measure, on the most important articles of consumption, have been decided on as follows:

In the lumber schedule the only increases were those on shingles from 30 cents to 50 cents per 1,000 and on briar wood and laurel wood for the use of pipe makers from the free list to 15 per cent. ad valorem. The rate on sawed lumber was decreased from $2 per 1,000 to $1.25 per 1,000. There was also a diminution on timber from one cent per cubic foot to one-half cent, and on sawed boards of white wood and kindred woods from $1 per 1,000 to 50 cents per 1,000. The reduction in the differential rates in favor of dressed lumber averaged about one-third of the Dingley rate. Paving posts, railroad ties and telephone poles are reduced from 20 to 10 per cent. ad valorem; clapboards from $1.50 per 1,000 to $1.25; laths from 25 cents to 20 cents per 1,000, while fence posts and kindling wood were taken from the dutiable list and placed on the free list.

The only change in the sugar schedule consisted of a reduction of five-hundredths of a cent in the differential on refined sugar.

In agricultural products broom corn was taken from the free list and made dutiable, at three dollars per ton. Hops are increased from 12 to 16 cents per pound. There are also increases on lemons, figs, almonds, pineapples and chicory root. The reductions in the agricultural schedule covered bacon and hams from five to four cents per pound, lard from two to one and one-half cents, fresh meats from two to one and one-half cents, and starch from one and one-half to one cent per pound. Tallow, wool grease, dextrin, peas, sugar beets, cabbages and salt were also lowered.

The wine and liquor schedule was increased throughout to 15 per cent. over the Dingley rates.

The cotton schedule was reconstructed and readjusted to bring the duties up to those collected during the first four years of the operation of the Dingley law and to the rate then collected under that law. Since that time the rates have been lowered, in some cases from 60 to 6 per cent. by court decisions. These new rates are equivalent to an addition, on the whole, of three per cent. ad valorem increase over that collected under the present law for last year.

Cotton Hosiery.

Cotton hosiery, valued at not more than $1 per dozen is increased from 50 to 70 cents per dozen pairs; more than $1 and less than $1.50 per dozen pairs, from 60 cents to 85 cents per dozen pairs; more than $1.50 and not more than $2, from 70 cents to 90 cents per dozen pairs.

The remaining rates on stockings are the same as under the present law.

Hemp is increased from $20 to $22.50 per ton and hackle hemp from $40 to $45 per ton. The cheaper laces remain as in the present law, but there is an increase from 60 to 70 per cent. on some of the higher priced laces. In this schedule single coarse yarns are reduced from seven cents to six cents per pound and gill nettings from 25 to 20 per cent. ad valorem.

There was a general reduction in carpets and mats.

A reduction from 20 cents to 15 cents is made in hydraulic hose. Oil cloth, including linoleum, was reduced about one-third.

There was practically no change in the wool schedule from the rates of the Dingley law but there was a readjustment between tops and yarns and a small decrease on cloths with a cotton warp.

Mechanically ground wood pulp was exempted from duty and placed on the free list with a provision for a countervailing duty against Canada. The lower grade of printing paper was reduced from $6 to $3.75 per ton and the higher grade from $8 to $3.75. There is an increase on surface coated paper and lithographing prints, including postcards and cigar labels.

Common window glass of the lower sizes in which the imports are heavy, is given a reduction, and where changes were made in the chemical schedule there was a general decrease, except upon such articles as fancy soaps and perfumes, which were increased.

Probably the most marked reductions throughout any schedule in the bill as a result of the action of the two houses and of the conference committee are found in the metal schedule. Beginning with a decrease in the rate of iron ore from 40 to 15 cents per ton, there is a general reduction throughout that portion of the bill, pig iron going down from $4 to $2.50 per ton, and scrap iron from $4 to $1. The reduction on many of the items in this schedule amounts to about 50 per cent., and this reduction includes steel rails.

Other reductions in the metal schedule affect polished sheets, rolled sheets of iron, steel, copper, or nickel, steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms and slabs; round iron or steel wire; steel bars or rods, cold rolled, cold drawn, or cold hammered, or polished; anvils, axles; blacksmith's hammers and sledges, track tools, wedges and crowbars; bolts; cast iron pipes; cast hollow ware; chains; lap welded or jointed iron or steel boiler tubes; cut nails and spikes; horseshoe nails; wire nails; spikes, nuts and washers; cut tacks; steel plates engraved; rivets; cross-cut saws, mill-saws, circular saws, pit and drag saws, steel band saws and all other saws; screws; wheels for railway purposes; aluminum; momazite sand and thorite.

Bituminous coal goes down from 67 cents to 45 cents per ton, and there are reductions on gunpowder, matches and cartridges. Agricultural implements are cut from 20 to 15 per cent. ad valorem.

Hides were placed on the free list, while the rate on band and sole leather is reduced from 20 per cent. to five per cent. ad valorem, on dressed leather from 20 per cent. to 10 per cent.; boots and shoes from 25 per cent. to 10 per cent.

Fireworks are increased from 20 per cent. advalorem to 12 cents per pound; wearing apparel made of fur from 35 to 50 per cent., and the higher class jewelry from 60 per cent. to 85 per cent. ad valorem; pencil lead is given specific rates instead of ad valorem rates with a slight increase. For the first time moving picture films are named specifically in a tariff law. The bill gives them a positive rate of 1½ cents per foot.

Petroleum, crude and refined, including kerosene, gasoline, naphtha, benzine and similar petroleum products are made free of duty and are left even without a countervailing duty.

The Dingley rates on women's and children's gloves are allowed to stand. The only change is a reduction on "schmaschen" gloves not over 14 inches in length on which the rate is made $1.25 a dozen pairs instead of $1.75.

Miscellaneous Provisions.

A provision is included in the bill which levies on all articles upon which any foreign country pays a bounty or grant upon its exportation, an additional duty equal to the amount of such bounty.

It is required that all imported articles capable of being marked without impairment of their value shall be stamped with the name of the manufacturer and the country of origin.

A very elaborate provision for the administration of the customs laws was adopted by the conferees. It is practically the same as that adopted by the senate. It is intended to prevent undervaluation of articles on which there is no foreign market by which true values may be ascertained.

Provision is made for the establishment of a customs court of appeals, with headquarters in Washington. It will comprise a presiding judge and four associate judges, at salaries of $10,000 a year. There are to be appointed to conduct government cases before this court a special assistant attorney general at $10,000, a deputy assistant attorney general at $7,500, and four attorneys at $5,000 each.

The internal revenue tax on tobacco is amended, making the rates on chewing and smoking tobacco eight cents a pound. No change was made in the tax on cigars, except those weighing under three pounds per 1,000, which were increased from 54 to 75 cents per 1,000. The rates on cigarettes were increased to $1.25 per 1,000. A prohibition against the use of coupons or special gift pledges is incorporated in the new law.

The provision granting farmers the free sale of leaf tobacco places a restriction on the retail dealer which requires him to record every sale amounting to two pounds or more to one person in one day. A number of other ironclad requirements are included in the redraft of this section adopted by the conference committee, by which it was intended to prevent any frauds upon the internal revenues, and at the same time give as much of a local market as possible to the tobacco grower. The grower had contended for unrestricted sale of amounts up to ten pounds.

Foreign built yachts are subject to an excise tax of seven dollars per gross ton, which is to be collected annually on the first day of September. In lieu of the excise tax the owner of a foreign built yacht or pleasure boat may pay a duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem on his yacht. This will entitle him to American registry. The excise tax provision was adopted because of the fact that some question has been raised about the ability of the government to enforce collection of import duties.

Corporation Tax.

Every corporation, joint stock company or association organized for profit, and every insurance company is required to pay annually an excise tax of one per cent. upon its entire net income over and above $5,000. This feature was put into the bill to raise additional revenues to apply on the treasury deficit. The section was prepared by Attorney General Wickersham, assisted by other able lawyers in the administrative circle, and great care was taken to guard against double taxation. It provides a form of publicity which will enable the government to exercise supervision over corporations. The form of returns which must be made by corporations, and other features of the corporation tax law were made public in detail during its consideration in the senate. It is estimated that from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 a year will be collected under this form of federal taxation.

The secretary of the treasury is authorized to issue Panama canal bonds to the amount of $290,569,000, which sum, together with that already expended, equals the estimated cost of the Panama canal. It is not intended that the bonds shall be issued except as needed to provide money to carry on the work of canal construction. The bonds are to be payable 50 years from the date of issue, and will bear interest at a rate not exceeding three per cent. When the bonds are sold the secretary of the treasury will restore to the working balance the $50,000,000 paid originally for the canal property and the canal zone.

The re-enactment of the provision authorizing the issuance of treasury certificates for money borrowed to meet public expenditures, increases the amount of the authorization from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000. A large number of other provisions that are in force under the existing tariff law are included in the conference bill, with a few changes in phraseology in several cases.

The drawback provision of the Dingley law is incorporated in the conference bill in lieu of the drawback of the house bill which intended to permit the substitution of domestic material in the manufactured article for export to the same quantity that the imported material, upon which a drawback was obtainable, was used in the manufacture of similar articles for domestic consumption. An additional provision was adopted entitling users of domestic alcohol in the manufacture of perfumery and cosmetics to secure a drawback of internal revenue tax to the amount of alcohol used in an exported article.

Senate Ideas Accepted.

Practically all the administrative features of the bill which were adopted in the senate were accepted by the conferees. They include a new maximum and minimum feature, a corporation tax law instead of the inheritance tax adopted by the house, authorization for a bond issue to raise money to build the Panama canal, as well as numerous other features.

The maximum and minimum provision prescribes duties in accordance with the rates named in the dutiable list until March 31, 1910, when 25 per cent. ad valorem is to be added automatically as the maximum duty. The president is authorized to apply the minimum rates, however, to imports from a country which gives its best rates to the products of the United States and is made the judge as to whether a foreign country accords to the United States treatment which is reciprocal and equivalent. When he finds that this condition exists he is to issue a proclamation putting in effect the minimum rates and until the time of the proclamation the maximum rates will apply.

The president is empowered to employ such persons as may be required to secure information to assist the president in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him and information which will be useful to the officers of the government in the administration of the customs laws. The reciprocity treaty with Cuba is not affected by the maximum and minimum provision.

The president is empowered also to abrogate those reciprocity treaties which can be terminated by diplomatic action. It is made his duty to give 10 days' notice after the bill becomes a law of his intention to bring those treaties to an end. All other treaties which contain no stipulation in regard to their termination by diplomatic action shall be abrogated by a notice of six months from the president to those countries, the notice dating from April 30, 1909, on which date Secretary Knox notified foreign governments that the United States would soon ask them to enter into new tariff relations.

Don't Gush.

There is no trait in a woman more objectionable to the sensible-minded than gushing. A little flattery now and then is most certainly relished by all of us, and tickles our vanity immensely. To be effective, it must be administered in small doses and at well selected moments. The woman who gushes not only sacrifices the respect of others but self-respect, too; for in time she comes to live up to the reputation she has gained for herself of being insincere.

The "Hyde of Land."

According to an ancient law in England, "a hyde of land" included what could reasonably be cultivated with one plow. This applied for scores of years, but at the dissolution of the religious orders in the reign of Henry VIII. the "hyde," or cultivated land of the abbots of Westminster, all reverted to the possession of the crown. That marked the gradual decline of that means of measuring land, and before many years the term fell into disuse, never to be revived.

Mail Carrier Must Have Realized That He Picked Out Wrong Man to Have Fun With.

The new mail carrier on the rural free delivery route glanced at the name on the letter box by the roadside, stopped his horse, and spoke to the roughly attired farmer with the old slouch hat, who was resting his sun-browned arms on the gate and looking at him.

"I see," he said, "your name is Holmes."

"Yes."

"Beverly G.?"

"Yes, I'm the man that lives here."

"Any relation of Sherlock Holmes?" gravely asked the carrier.

"The pasture lay across a small river, and in the middle of the day the colt swam the stream to go up to the barn-yard for a drink of water."—Youth's Companion.

Crop Growing on Small Scale.

A small holder in East Lexham is making an interesting experiment in barley growing upon his land to test the possibility of raising corn on a small scale. In 1907 he sowed 78 specially selected grains of barley, which yielded 400 ears. The resulting kernels he sowed in 1908 and harvested in 14 weeks, with the result that he got a bushel of threshed barley, which he has sown this year, his object being to show what can be done in cereal cultivation from very small beginnings.—London Standard.

Laundry work at home would be much more satisfactory if the right Starch were used. In order to get the desired stiffness, it is usually necessary to use so much starch that the beauty and fineness of the fabric is hidden behind a paste of varying thickness, which not only destroys the appearance, but also affects the wearing quality of the goods. This trouble can be entirely overcome by using Defiance Starch, as it can be applied much more thinly because of its greater strength than other makes.

"I guess it's 'C. Q. D.' ain't it?" suggested Holbrook, the grocer. "Anyway, it's a signal of distress," he added, moodily.

MULE GETS PENSION

Animal First to Know of Impending Disaster Gives Alarm.

Runs Away a Few Seconds Before Serious Cave-In Occurs and Men Follow Him, Thereby Escaping Being Buried Alive.

St. Louis, Mo.—Pete is a pensioner now.

Heroism and long service have at last won recognition. Pete saved the lives of ten men, and for the remainder of his life he will have nothing to do but eat and sleep and kick up his heels.

Pete is a little bay mule, who for many years has worked in the Summit coal mines, four miles west of Belleville. He was never idle a day, except Sundays, and most of the time he was far below the surface of the earth, pulling cars of coal through the narrow mine passages.

Unlike most animals of this service, Pete did not go blind. His eyes are still keen and he will have no difficulty finding choice tid-bits of thistle-down in the big pasture which in future will be his country estate.

Pete has been the pride of the mine since the day when he saved the lives of the shift with which he worked.

Pulling his little car of coal through one of the mine passages, Pete suddenly broke from the brisk walk which was his usual gait and started off down the dimly lighted corridor at a gallop.

The ten men behind him thought he was running away, and they started after him. Into the next chamber they followed him, and just as they reached it there was a rumble, a roar, and a crash behind them. The roof of the chamber they had just left had given way. Had they been there they would have been buried under tons of rock.

Pete's ears, keener than theirs, had heard the warning sound and he had led them to safety.

In the 25 years that Pete has worked in the mine he has been 6,250 days below ground. Fifty days in each year he worked on the surface, hauling timbers and rubbish.

While in the mine he traveled an average of four miles a day, the total distance which he covered being 25,000 miles. Had he stayed above ground and followed his nose he would have gone around the earth in that time.

He hauled an average of five tons of coal a day, a total of 31,250 tons, or 70,312,250 pounds. At the St. Louis market price of three dollars a ton this coal would bring $93,750.

William Edwin, manager of the mine, issued an order by which Pete is forever relieved of doing his humble share in adding to the wealth of nations.

FINES HIMSELF FOR SPEEDING

British Columbia Magistrate Hears His Own Case and Imposes Penalty of $5.

Vancouver, B. C.—Police Magistrate Adolphus Williams sat on his own case in police court and fined himself five dollars and costs for over speeding his automobile. His honor had just disposed of the cases of two well-known citizens for speeding, when his own name was called. In vain the magistrate's eye scanned the courtroom for another Adolphus Williams.

"Does that charge refer to me?" asked the magistrate, rather meekly, of Crown Prosecutor Kennedy.

"Yes," said Kennedy, "I think you have a right to try it yourself. It is not worth while making a written request to another magistrate."

His honor found that he had been going 19 miles an hour when the law allows only eight.

"Williams is ordered to pay five dollars and costs," said the court.

LAVENDER HARVEST BE GOOD

English Town Has Distilled Flowers and Sent Extract All Over World for Many Years.

London.—One of the minor harvests that promises well is that of the lavender fields. Some flourishing crops are to be seen in the Hitchin neighborhood.

Comparatively few know of this quaint Hertfordshire town as an important lavender growing center, yet it has grown the sweet old herb (which the Romans called lavandula when they used it to scent their baths), has distilled the flowers, and sent their extract into all parts of the world for more than a century.

The Hitchin district had less rain and more sunshine than the London area recently, and consequently the long, trim rows of lavender plants in their dusky green look strong and healthy. They are beginning to show their flower buds, and there is every likelihood of an abundant yield at cutting time.

Mr. Perks, the modern representative of the firm of Perks & Llewellyn, who in 1790 were the pioneers here of lavender farming and distilling, said that even this industry must be numbered among those which are suffering from foreign competition. It is almost entirely owing to the importation of cheap French oil of lavender that the area under the crop, at least in this neighborhood, is gradually decreasing," he said.

"The reason is that Hitchin has always prided itself on producing the finest extract of lavender flowers obtainable, and that, in view of the foreign competition, is an expensive standard to maintain.

"Nothing but the heads of bloom go into the still. The more stalk used the ranker is the oil produced. There is a wonderful difference in quality between the English and French oil.

"At cutting time people come in from miles around to inhale the sweetness of the fields, and when the distilling begins the fragrance of lavender is borne on the wind two miles or more from the town. The flowers are put into the still with the fresh bloom of their maturity on them, and from six pounds of such flowers about half an ounce of oil is extracted."

BEES STOP TRAIN

Professional Apiarist Is Quickly Put to Flight.

Spokane, Wash.—While swarming bees are credited with doing all sorts of unusual things, probably this is the first time that a queen and her retinue and subjects completely tied up a steam railroad. It happened at Twin Falls, Idaho, the other day.

Tin dishpans, tom-toms, whistles and other recognized lures failed to dislodge the swarm, which had settled in the spout of the standpipe at the water tank, where a long train of freight cars stood on the main line without sufficient water in the boiler of the big mogul to pull out. The driver and coal heaver did excellent work in trying to reach the pipe, but the bees gave them short shift and the men refused to make a second attempt.

H. A. Swab, a local expert in bee matters, bore down upon the scene to capture the swarm. He was armed with a nail keg and two long sticks. He sent his helper to coax the bees into the keg, but in less than six seconds the assistant had a score of active bees up his sleeves, and he made a dash toward the railway station. Swab also remembered he had an important business engagement elsewhere.

The foreman and members of the section crew were next routed, and when the engineer appealed to Agent Sullivan that worthy declared it was a matter for the maintenance of way department. The conductor of the stalled train suggested sending for the sheriff, while the stoker insisted upon calling out the fire brigade. The brakeman on the front end offered no solution, as he was nursing a dozen or more knobs of the size of mature hickory nuts on face, hands and body.

Finally a bystander prescribed the water cure, adding: "If that doesn't drive 'em away nothing will." A well-directed stream from a garden hose seemed to have a quieting effect, and the pipe was lowered to the intake on the tender and the tank filled with bees and water.

While replacing the pipe the fireman was attacked by a few stragglers, and to protect himself from further onslaught he tied a red bandana handkerchief around his head. After raising the spout he tucked the handkerchief into his pocket and accepted the congratulations of the onlookers upon his escape, but while mopping his face a vagrant bee winged its way out of the folds of the bandana and stung him on the lip.

After the excitement with the bees, two small boys climbed to the roof of the water tank and with bare hands captured the queen, placing her in the bottom of the keg, into which the bees quickly swarmed. Swab bought the swarm, presenting the boys $1.25 and the incident closed.

"Suicide King" Sentenced.

Hamilton, O.—Charles Wolf of Connersville, Ind., known as the "Hoosier Suicide King," was sentenced to 200 days in the workhouse by Acting Mayor Smedley in police court.

Wolf went to the office of Dr. G. M. Cummins and while the physician was waiting on a patient in his private office swallowed a quantity of diluted carbolic acid. He was removed to Mercy hospital, where older attaches recognized his voice and identified Wolf, who has spent several days in the institution on previous occasions and under similar conditions.

Wolf was ejected from the hospital and placed in a cell in the county jail. He has made no less than six attempts at suicide in Hamilton.

Woman Slaps Burglar.

St. Louis.—Mrs. Albert Rexford, 624 East Second street, Alton, Ill., awakened just at daybreak to see a man in his stocking feet crouching toward her bed.

He had a knife in his hand and was reaching for Mr. Rexford's trousers. Mrs. Rexford gave a scream and leaped at the burglar, striking him fairly in the face.

This so frightened the man that he almost took the sash with him as he dived through the window. This commotion awakened Mr. Rexford, who obtained his pistol, but the burglar had vanished.

Mrs. Rexford says she was so frightened she did not know what she was doing.

New Method of Keeping Potatoes

A German publication, "The Practical Adviser in Fruit Raising and Gardening," states that a new method for keeping potatoes and preventing sprouting consists in placing them on a layer of coke. Dr. Schiller of Brunswick, who has published the method, is of the opinion that the improved ventilation by means of coke is not alone responsible for the result, but believes that it is due to the oxidation of the coke, which, however, is a very slow one. Coke always contains sulphur, and it is very possible that the minute quantities of oxides of carbon and sulphur, which result from the oxidation, mixing with the air and penetrating among the potatoes are sufficient to greatly retard sprouting. Potatoes so treated are said to keep in good condition until the following July.

Buckeye St., Iola, Kans., says: "The kidney secretions were irregular, scanty and painful and contained sediment. My back was stiff and lame and my limbs swelled. I grew weak and discouraged. Doan's Kidney Pills removed these troubles entirely. I have been well for two years."

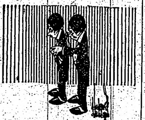
A LONG WAY BACK.



George—There's Miss Passay. She claims she's never been kissed.

Harry—Why, I've kissed her myself, years ago. She means not since she can remember.

Physician's Mean Trick.

A doctor was one day stopped in the streets by one of his woman patients whose malady was purely imaginary. The doctor, who was known for his intolerance of and nonsympathy with such invalids, after listening somewhat impatiently to the woman's detailed account of all her feelings and symptoms, told her to shut her eyes and put out her tongue. She promptly did so. On opening her eyes in a few seconds the doctor was nowhere to be seen, and the woman awoke to the fact that he had left her standing by herself in a busy thoroughfare with her eyes shut and her tongue hanging out.

The Water Bite.

He was six years old and had never gazed into the mystic lens of a microscope. Several slides containing animalcula had been displayed to his astonished vision. He was too amazed to make any comment until he came to one slide that seemed more wriggly than any of the others. It was merely a drop of water.

The little fellow gazed at it a long time, with all its nimble particles of animal life, and finally exclaimed to his mother:

"Oh, mamma, now I know what it is that bites you when you drink soda water.

Defined.

"Say, pop, what's civil service?"

"Eh? It's an act governing the service in the department, the customs, the postal, the government printing—"

"But, dad, what does it mean?"

"Mean? It means where a busy man rushes into the postoffice to buy some stamps, falls in line, waits an hour and 20 minutes before reaching the window—then, after tendering a hundred-dollar bill, hears the tallow-faced clerk murmur pleasantly:

"'Wholesale stamps at the next window, please!'"—Bohemian.

But Not In.

Evelyn—I saw you in bathing this morning, George. It's funny you didn't see me.

George—I didn't expect to.

Evelyn—I was sure you saw me at one time. I was standing close by you on the beach.

George—Oh, yes. I saw you in your bathing suit.

THE NEW WOMAN

Made Over by Quitting Coffee.

Coffee probably wrecks a greater percentage of Southerners than of Northern people for Southerners use it more freely.

The work it does is distressing enough in some instances; as an illustration, a woman of Richmond, Va., writes:

"I was a coffee drinker for years and for about six years my health was completely shattered. I suffered fearfully with headache and nervousness, also palpitation of the heart and loss of appetite.

"My sight gradually began to fail and finally I lost the sight of one eye altogether. The eye was operated upon and the sight partially restored, then I became totally blind in the other eye.

"My doctor used to urge me to give up coffee, but I was willful and continued to drink it until finally in a case of severe illness the doctor insisted that I must give up the coffee, so I began using Postum, and in a month I felt like a new creature.

"I steadily gained in health and strength. About a month ago I began using Grape-Nuts food and the effect has been wonderful. I really feel like a new woman and have gained about 25 pounds.

"I am quite an elderly lady and before using Postum and Grape-nuts I could not walk a square without exceeding fatigue, now I walk ten or twelve without feeling it. Formerly in reading I could remember but little but now my memory holds fast what I read.

"Several friends who have seen the remarkable effects of Postum and Grape-Nuts on me have urged that I give the facts to the public for the sake of suffering humanity, so, although I dislike publicity, you can publish this letter if you like."

HIS PLEASURE A LATE ONE.

Probably Mr. Hogan Did Not Realize Just What Might Be Made of His Expression.

Casey was dead, and to do honor to him the members of the Thirteenth district Tammany organization attended the funeral in a body, says the New York Press. Slowly and sadly they filed past the coffin and took a last look at their departed comrade. At the door each man paused to shake hands with the sorrowing widow and to murmur a few words of condolence. When it came to Mr. Hogan's turn, he retained possession of her hand, while he delivered a lengthy oration concerning the good qualities of the defunct Mr. Casey.

"Sure, 'tis plain you knew my husband well, sir," said the tearful Mrs. Casey.

"Only by sight, ma'am, only by sight," Mr. Hogan hastened to explain, "I never had the pleasure of meetin' him 'til to-day."

HEARTLESS.

Horace—Ah! Miss Gwace, what should a young man do when he wants to write spring poetry?

Grace—He should see a doctor.

ITCHED FOR TWELVE YEARS.

Quickly Cured by Cuticura.

"I suffered from eczema on my hands, arms and feet for about twelve years, my hands and feet would swell, sweat and itch, then would become callous and get very dry, then peel off and get raw. I tried most every kind of salve and ointment without success. I tried several doctors, but at last gave up thinking there was a cure for eczema. A friend of mine insisted on my trying the Cuticura Remedies, but I did not give them a trial until I got so bad that I had to do something. I secured a set and by the time they were used I could see a vast improvement and my hands and feet were healed up in no time. I have had no trouble since. Charles T. Bauer, Volant, Pa., Mar. 11, 1908."

Always a Way.

"The cook has furnished rather small portions," said the hostess. "The woman guests won't eat much, but how about the men?"

"I'll circulate around and nominate each of 'em to make an after-dinner speech," responded the host. "That will effectually kill off their appetites."

With a smooth iron and Defiance Starch, you can launder your shirt-waist just as well at home as the steam laundry can; it will have the proper stiffness and finish, there will be less wear and tear of the goods, and it will be a positive pleasure to use a Starch that does not stick to the iron.

Exceptions.

"You don't have to be enthusiastic to succeed in some things," said the boarding-house philosopher; "I once saw a man achieve a speed of a mile a minute sliding down a mountain side, without the slightest effort on his part and without having had any ambition to do it."

A crowd of young ladies, fourteen in number, the F. F. B's., went out to Maple Lake Monday afternoon and remained until Wednesday, the guests of Mrs. J. E. Argue at the cottage. It rained all the time they were at the lake, so they could not enjoy themselves on the water, but the girls say they had a glorious time playing tag in the house—and nobody doubts it.

The Gazette this week received a letter from H. W. Anderson. Andy is now located in Astoria, Oregon, but since leaving Red Lake Falls and before planting himself in the west to grow up with the country, he did much traveling. He visited Denver and took a trip up the famous Georgetown Loop, as no one visiting Denver should fail to do, he says. He went to Mantau and climbed Pike's Peak. At Salt Lake City one of the Mormon fathers took him through the Tabernacle. People here will be unable to understand what moved the Mormon elder to take such an interest in such a confirmed bachelor as Andy is known to be. Perhaps it was the missionary spirit that moved him. Before going to Astoria Andy visited the exposition at Seattle and many other interesting places. He took a ride on an ocean steamer. The sea was rough and though he is feeling well now he has a vivid recollection of a time when his only desire was that he might die. Andy says "Greet the boys; yes, and the girls, too."

Investigation Tame.

Bemidji, Minn., Aug. 10.—Slow progress is being made in the hearing of the charges against Commissioners Wright, Sibley and Danaher. Little time was devoted to the hearing yesterday, as it was necessary to adjourn because Attorneys McDonald and Russel, who are defending the commissioners, were compelled to conduct cases in the district court. The time of the hearing is spent in examining claims, allowed in 1907, against the road and bridge fund.

Commissioner Ryan, who is conducting the hearing, expects that it will be concluded some time tomorrow.

Low Fares Northwest.

The Northern Pacific Railway has announced that low one way colonists fares will be in effect via its line daily from September 15 to October 15th, 1909, inclusive, to the North Pacific coast and intermediate points. These fares are for second class tickets, which are honored in tourist sleeping cars upon payment of berth rates, and are on the basis of $25.00 from S. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and Superior; $38.00 from Chicago, 32.00 from St. Louis and $25.00 from Missouri River points. Stopovers not to exceed ten days each may be obtained at stations enoute at and west of Glendive, Montana.

It has been the custom of the western lines to place these fares in effect each spring and fall to stimulate settlement of the west and northwest, and colonists fares are the means of bringing into the Northwest thousands of settlers who watch for these rates and shape their plans to migrate when the rates go into effect. This announcement by the Northern Pacific will be welcomed by the people who have heard, or seen for themselves, the attractions of the Northwestern states and who will this fall remove themselves and families into new fields to benefit by the health, wealth and progress of the "Land of Fortune."

Photographs by Telegraph.

Edward Berlin, a French engineer, has invented what is said to be a wonderful method of transmitting pictures by telegraph. A large photograph can be transmitted in half an hour by the new process. It is said too, that the ideal beverage for the home table is Golden Grain Belt Beer. It is the one beverage which is as good for the health as it is for the taste and makes a good temper and enjoyment of life. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

THE USEFUL PIG.

A Colored Woman's Story of a Trade and Its Results.

A colored woman was being examined at a conference at Tuskegee. "Do the people in your community own homes?" came the query from Mr. Booker Washington.

"But do they own them?"

"A heap of times you can't jest tell, sah. But they's holding 'em down."

"Do you own your home?"

"Yes, sah, I do," proudly. "And I can tell you jest how I got it. I swapped a puppy dog for it."

"Tell us about it."

"Well, it was this way. When I started I didn't have anything at all but jest a little yaller puppy dog.

"I took the dog over to my brother-in-law's. He had eight little bits of pigs, oh, jest so little, and I swapped the puppy with him for one of the pigs. It was sech a little pig that it didn't look like it would live, but I nursed it good, and I prayed to the Lord to make that little pig come for'ard to do me good, and the pig lived and grew.

"The first year I turned her out, and when she came back in the fall she brought me seven little pigs with her. That was my start. I've never had to buy any meat since. This winter I've killed three hogs, and I've got another at home now ready to kill. I've got forty acres of land now, all paid for, and a house, and it all come from that one little puppy."

"Do you hear that," exclaimed Mr. Washington, "you men? Some of you'd better go back home and swap your dogs for pigs!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

"Dave, how do you get your lesson so well now?" said the master.

"I learn every word in the lesson and get my mother to hear me at night; then I go over them in the morning before I come to school, and I go over them at my seat before the class is called up."

"Good boy, Dave!" said the master. "That's the way to have success; always work that way and you'll do."

Dave is today the manager of a big lumber company, and he attributes his start to the words:

"Go up ahead and see that you stay there. You can if you work hard."—Genesee Courier.

THE POWER OF MUSIC

By ELSIE B. HARRISON.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

In the Teutonic race a love for music is mingled with a weird philosophy, and when united with romance together they are capable of producing marvelous effects on the human soul. Such effect has been produced not only on Germans, but on music lovers of every country by the opera of "Faust." It probably appeals to more people than any opera ever written, and, while other stories in music come and go, that of Faust, Marguerite and Mephistopheles remains.

But there are deeper effects produced on only a few by certain music to which the souls of the millions are not attuned, just as we can conceive of an ear so delicately constructed as to hear the grass grow.

Friedrich Nietzsche, an eminent German philosopher, has declared there is that in some music, most notably the works of Wagner and Tschaikowsky, that produces a baneful effect on the brain and nerves even to the extent of causing tragedy.

One evening three music lovers in Berlin were entertaining themselves by playing together snatches from the great composers. They were Carl Becker, Bertha, his wife, and Heinrich Twingler. Becker played the violin, his wife the piano and Twingler the violoncello. Becker bore on his face, in his eye, in his whole makeup, evidence that he was born to music; his wife was a fair haired, blue eyed woman of a gentle disposition, while Twingler, a devotee of science, looked as if he would be capable of any sacrifice in its cause.

"Let us have the Sixth Symphony," he said.

A pained look shot across the face of Mrs. Becker. "No, no;" she exclaimed; "not that one! I don't like it!"

Twingler fixed his eyes upon her. There was a cold, deprecatory look in them.

"And why don't you like it?" he asked.

"Carl is never the same after playing it. He is always so melancholy."

"Well, if your husband is not a man of sufficient vigor of will to resist the influence of a few harmonious strains we shall have to choose something else."

"We will play the Sixth Symphony," said Becker, getting out the music and putting it on the rack before him. The others placed their own parts in position. Becker tapped with his bow, and they began to play. Now and again Mrs. Becker glanced aside from her score at Twingler inquiringly. Had he anything to do with the effect produced on her husband when he played this symphony? No; Twingler was evidently absorbed in his own part.

Then the wife began to look anxiously at the husband. His violin seemed a human being, alternately sighing, smiling, moaning, laughing. The violinist's face, especially his eye, the soul's window, expressed all these moods in turn, but always turning to melancholy. His wife was troubled. Toward the end the sounds grew more and more painful till Becker's instrument finally gave what seemed to be the wail of a broken heart.

The violinist stopped, turned and looked at the others. His wife cowered before his glance, which was that of a melancholy demon. Twingler coolly drew a covering over his violoncello, folded the sheet music before him, said good night to the other two and took his departure.

Becker went to his room. His wife, instead of undressing, sat in her own room adjoining her husband's listening. Twice she arose, put her hand on the knob of the door separating her from him as if to go in to soothe him, but each time her resolution failed her. She feared to excite him further. Suddenly there came from his room a sharp report. With a shriek she threw open the door and saw her husband lying on the floor, the blood oozing from his temple. He never spoke again.

A few evenings later Heinrich Twingler stood before a meeting of a philosophic society of which he was a member to address his fellows.

"You are probably aware," he said, "that I have been studying the influence of sounds on the human brain. The fact that Tschaikowsky destroyed himself after composing his Sixth Symphony does not prove that his work led him to do so. It has been reported that several persons have died by their own hands after playing it, and, as you know, it is called the 'suicide symphony.' But I have never been able to get any confirmation of these reports. I, therefore determined in the cause of science to sacrifice if necessary one of my personal friends. After playing this symphony with him several times I concluded that if he continued to play it he would probably kill himself. A few evenings ago I induced him to play it with me and his wife, who, being aware of its effect on him, came very near defeating my purpose by objecting and during the rendering stopped short in her part. It was not necessary for me to interfere, for her husband was by this time so affected by Tschaikowsky's remarkable work that he dominated her, and she proceeded. I was deeply interested in the marvelous influence of the symphony over the subject, giving a power of expression that I have never been cognizant of in any one before. At midnight after the rendering he shot himself.

"I regret the sacrifice both to him and his wife, but in the fatherland we know no obstacle to the cause of science."

WILL BUILD A MODEST BUILDING

Red Lake County to Have a Court House at Moderate Cost.

Commissioners Advertising for Bids—Price Not to Exceed $15,500.

The county commissioners in session Saturday rejected all bids that had been on file for the purchase of the court house bonds and also rejected all bids for the construction of a court house according to certain plans that were on file. Thus all injunction proceedings are satisfactorily disposed of. Every act those proceedings were instituted to restrain the performance of has been rescinded by the act of the commissioners All that has been done is history now, yet it has served a good purpose. The Thief River committee has played the little game and a judicial determination of some questions has been obtained. A bond issue, for example, is held to be valid. As was naturally expected Judge Watts issued a temporary restraining order, the purpose of which was no doubt to determine whether the commissioners had or had not exceeded the statutory limitation in the amount proposed to be expended in the erection of a court house according to certain plans. However, the act of the commissioners in rejecting all bids for the construction of a building according to those lpans disposes of the question. The commissioners can now proceed more intelligently--thanks to the Thief River people for doing what was expected of them.

But Red Lake county is to have a new court house. It is to be a modest building. The commissioners have accepted plans and are advertising for bids for the construction of a building that is to cost not more than $15 ,500. There are no injunction proceedings covering this last act of the commissioners and such proceedings can a vail the up-river people nothing. There can now be no question that the commissioners are acting within the law. And they are doing the county a service. What citizen of the county outside of those selfishly interested but that will be glad that a court house building is to be erected at a moderate cost and the prolonged and disgusting county seat squabble settled

Not even the Thief River people will doubt the validity of this last act of the commissioners, however great a bluff they may put up. In expending only $15,500 for a court house the commissioners clearly are acting within the law. In fact the four mill court house tax will pay for the erection of the building and surely no one questions the vaildity of the tax levy.

Some kind friend ought to tell the Thief River people something. They ought to be advised that it is useless to pass the hat any more. There is something in being a good loser and there is still a chance for them to be that. Of course that isn't a very big consolation prize, but it beats bumping up against a stone wall.

HARVESTING BIG CROP.

Much Grain Will be in Shock Saturday Night.

Most favorable weather for harvesting the bumper crop in southern Red Lake county has enabled the farmers to make excellent progress with the work and the grain is being harvested under the most favorable conditions.

It stands up so well that little will be lost and it is estimated that the yield will be better than for many years past. With a continuation of the good weather a large part of the grain will be in the shock b y Saturday night and a week later there will be little that will not have been cut.

The Proper Dress.

The bridegroom and his attendants at a five o'lock church wedding should wear frock coats, gray striped trousers, white waist coats, white shirts, poke collars, white or gray ascots with gloves in a shade to match. Patent leather shoes, and should carry a silk hat. Also Golden Grain belt beer should be served at the table to insure health. Keen appetite comes from its use. Order of your nearest dealer or be suppiled by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

No Gambling.

The Gazette made the statement last week that there was a lot of gambling at the county fair at Thief River Falls. The way that the big mit artists used to go after the natives at the big pumpkin show is a matter of local history and the Gazette was mislead last week by the statement of some knockers returning from the fair who said that the same old gang occupied most of the ground at the county fair. The statement was not true. The fair officials wisely placed the policeing of the grounds in the hands of Sheriff Nelson and deputies and all gambling was promply stopped. The Gazette does not intentionally make misstatements and this correction is gladly and voluntarily made.

SHOULD PREPARE FOR STATE FAIR EXHIBIT

Fine Crop Being Harvested Should Assure Excellet Exhibit at State Fair.

Red Lake county is to have an exhibit at the state fair and the fine crop that is being harvested ought to assure an exhibit that will be a great advertisement of the agricultural resources of the county. In order to accomplish this result the farmers should co-operate in every possible way with the people who are preparing the exhibit.

Farmers are urged to select the best samples of grains and vegetables and bring them to town. From the fields now being harvested it will be possible to get some fine sampes. It is now time to begin preparations for the exhibit. Articles brought in may be left with Mayor Duffy or any of the real estate dealers who will see to it that the exhibit is prepared in the best possible manner for the show at the state fair.

Had Narrow Escape.

Chas. N. Bourdon came in on the passenger Wednesday mornng for a brief business call. He came down from Bijou at which place he experienced a very narrow escape Tuesday evening. While sitting at supper an electrical storm passed over, a bolt of lightning striking the chimney. It did considerable damage and passed thru the floor within three feet of where Mr. Bourdon was sitting. He received quite a severe shaking up and did not feel very well the next day.—Waubun Forum.

An Auto Wrecked.

The National touring car, owned by SundahlBros., was hit by a Soo freight train at noon last Friday on the crossing just south of the depot and the machine was badly damaged. John Sundahl was driving the automobile and Mrs. A. M. Arpin was a passenger. Mrs. Arpin jumped before the train hit the auto and sustained no injury. The two hind wheels of the machine were demolised and other damages done. A claim has been filed with the Soo road for the damages.—Thief River News.

Mrs. Kaus and Miss Margaret Kaus spent a part of the week at Crookston.

SHERIFF'S NEW HOUSE.

Contract Let for Remodeling Dwelling.

The county commissioners in session last Saturday let the contract for the remodeling of the dwelling house that is to become the sheriff's residence. The Damas Bray house, located on the land recently purchased for the court house site, must be moved to make room for the new building. The commissioners entered into a contract with Aug. Morin to move the buiding back to a location near the county jail and place it on a solid foundation and make other alterations. The contract price for the work is $300. The other house located on the land purchased and that must also be moved was sold to W. A. Schreiter, who is at present occuping the building. Mr. Schreiter paid $300 for the building and is to moved it from the lots.

MORE TIME GRANTED.

Northern Minnesota Land Opening is Postponed.

Cass Lake, Minn., Aug. 16—The register and receiver of the local United States land office have received word from the department of the interior that the lands in Winnibigoshish, Cass Lake, Leech Lake, Chippewa, Missisisippi and Leech Lake Indian reservations, not in cluded in the national forest reserve, created by act of May 23, 1908, and not yet opened to homestead entry shall be excluded from entry for a period of six months, commencing Sept. 13 next.

The lands were at first advertised to be opened on March 13 last, but the interior department postponed the opening for six months for the purpose of facilitating the exchange of allotments from lands within the limits of such national forest reserves to lands outside thereof. This change as made in the recommendation of the commissioner of Indian affairs. On July 28 last, the commissioner of Indian affairs reported that the change could not be perfected in that length of time and requested that an additional six months be given. The department of the interior has approved the request and so instructed the proper officials.

DRAINAGE DITCHES MEAN MUCH TROUBLE

Engineer Thinks Thief River Work Will Mean International Difficulties.

International problems as well as interstate and state problems will soon develop as results of the drainage work now nuder way in Minnesota, says William R. Hoag, engineer in charge of extensive work in eastern Marshall county.

"This country," says Mr. Hoag, "is tributary to the Thief River. The settlers obtained their land either from the government through the home stead act or purchased it from the state. In either case the federal or state government virtually guaranteed them farms. They have no farms now. When they went on the land probably in dry years, it was suitable for tillage, but now much of it is covered with water.

"These ditches will take a lot of water into the Thief River. This is a small stream and the channel will be unable to carry off the additional water. We will do some work toward enlarging the Thief river, but this will not solve the problem. The river drains into the Red Lake river and the state must take care of the surplus water in some way, but here another difficulty confronts. The Red Lake is a tributary to the Red River of the North which forms the boundary between Minnesota and North Dakota.

"Even now in flood periods the channel is not large enough and much damage is caused periodically. What the situation will be when the flow is greatly increased by numerous drainage ditches can only be imagined.

"The Red river for the lower part of its course flows through Canada which converts the entire matter into an international question. There are fully a thousand square miles with splendid soil which should be reclaimed. The burden should not be placed upon the settlers for they are in no position to bear the cost and it should not be expected of them. It is the duty of the national government to solve the question and take charge of the work."

FOR POLITICAL AND OTHER SORE SPOTS

Governor's Private Secretory, Great Lubricator, Increases His Usefulness.

Minneapolis Journal: "Frank A. Day, chairman of the state democratic committee, private secretary to Governor John A. Johnson, campaign manager and politician, has organized a salve company. It is to sell real salve.

"Mr. Day has long been recognized in Minnesota and the northwest as the Great Smoother. He has enacted brilliantly through many perilous and fretful periods the role of democratic axle-grease, has applied in masterly fashion some never-failing emollient to various raw and tender spots, and has, in fact, so proved himself past master at the gentle art of making the wheels go round without audible creak, that upon more than one occasion political friends and foes alike have speculated upon the precise nature of this unparalelled lubricant.

"Today the secret is out, for shortly the market will be flooded with the genuine Day salve, name on every box. It is called 'Z-Mex-O,' and it is to be handled at a price to place it within the grasp of every politician, however humble.

"A $50,000 stock company has been formed, in which Mr. Day is associated with several other men prominent in politics, but not so noted as salvers. One of them is John E. King, state librarian and last year manager of the democratic press bureau. J. A. Nowell of St. Paul, long a member of the democratic state committee, is another incorporator, while the chief financial backer is said to be Marcus Johnson, of Atwater, one of the most prominent republicans of western Minnesota. Additional incorporators are Anton Huhn, Minneapolis, and C. F. Rutherford, and W. P. Curtiss, St. Paul.

Got First Prize.

The High Landing creamery received notice this week that they had captured first prize for the best butter exhibited at the county fair held at Thief River Falls last week. This speaks well for the creamery scoring so high over the other older creameries of the county. —Eleven Towns.

Ives Was Generous.

Treasurer H. E. Ives was at Cass Lake last week and when parting with cash to pay his fare to return to Red Lake Falls, he bought a ticket to St. Hilaire. Since then various explanations have been offered by Ives' friends as to what induced the generosity. Some are of the opinion that he desired to make a contribution to the Great Northern conscience fund. Others believe that for reeasons that are apparent to the naked eye he was of the opinion that the railroad company was entitled to a rate and a half, or it may be that he thought Jim Hill needed the money. Anyhow, Ives had the price and he spent it.

WILL OPERATE MILL.

Milling Company Will Operate Healy Mill During Season.

Arrangements have been made by the Red Lake Falls Milling company for operating the Healy mill located at the lower dam and the mill will be started up in a few weeks. The large crop of grain to be handled this fall induced the milling company to make this arrangement.

Threshermen Fix Prices.

The threshermen of Polk county met at Crookston last Saturday and fixed a schedule of prices that are to prevail in that county the coming season. The prices agreed on are as follows:

4 cents per bushel for rye and wheat.
3 cents per bushel for oats and barley.
10 cents and up for flax.
15 to 25 cents for timothy seed.
$1 per bushel for clover.

Still Lives and Improves.

D. J. Forsness, the Grand Forks drayman who had his back broken in a runaway July 5, and whose death was expected hourly after the tragic accident, still lives at the Deaconess hospital. He suffers very little pain and seems to be improving each day. He eats and sleeps well and gets what enjoyment he can out of his long confinement.—Greenbush Tribune.

PAID A TENER AND COSTS.

First Arrest for Violation of Game Laws.

Before Judge K. O. Gigstad at St. Hilaire yesterday, T. J. Sumpter entered a plea of guilty of shooting one prairie chicken on Aug. 12.

Sumpter is a land man with an office at St. Hilaire and shot the chicken in the town of River Falls. The judge fined him $10 and costs which was paid.

FIRST PRIZE AT THE NORTH DAKOTA FAIR

H. C., Clement, Terrebonne Cheesemaker, Has Won Another Honor.

Fame of Red River Valley as a Dairy Country Continues to Grow.

H. C. Clement, cheesemaker at Terrebonne factory No. 70, last week received a notification that the sample of cheese submitted by him had scored the highest in the contest at the North Dakota state fair.

It seems that nearly all of the prizes for products of the dairy are coming to the Red River Valley. Either it is because the best butter and cheesemakers are on the job here, or that soil and climatic conditions are right and that the cow thrives and waxes fat and famous here. It takes a cheerful cow to produce such good results, so no doubt every condition has contributed to success and perhaps it is the story of the cow that eats the nourishing roots (and smiles) that gives the rich milk that has built the creamery and factory that is making the butter and cheese that is making the valley famous and lifting the mortgages from the farms.

Sues G. N. for $10.000.

Papers have been served this week in an action brought by Ole Landro, a traveling salesman who makes his home at Thief River Falls, against the Great Northern Railway company for damages to the amount of $10,000. The case will be tried at the October term of the district court for Red Lake county and promises to be warmly contested by both parties. Mr. Landro, claims that while riding on a Great Northern passenger train from Minto to Grafton, the train left the track and the plaintiff sustained injuies to his back that are painful and permanent.

The accident happened on the 16th of February, this year, and since that date Mr. Landro has been under the care of a physician. Attorney G. Halvorson will represent the plaintiff.—Thief River News.

In a communication to the Gazette this week C. E. Peterson says, "Tell the whole darn town hello." Everybody will recognize the characteristic greeting and would say, "Hello, Pete, you old scout." Pete says he has been a busy man since he left the Gazette ad alley, so busy that the business interferes with base ball considerable.

Roller Bearing Wagons

This invention has been tested and tried and has at last reached perfection. We have a wagon that runs one-third lighter, yet is as strong and durable as any wagon made.

It goes without saying that a load can be moved with less draft on wheels than to slide along the highway and it must follow that a wheel will revolve easier in the same degree when on rollers than when required to slide with friction on the endless surface of the boxing of the hub.

We will have one of these wagons here in a few days. You'll be interested to know how simply and durably it is constructed and we'll be glad to show it to you.

Thaw Will Try Again

Remanded to Asylum White's Slayer Says That He Will Try Higher Courts

HEARS VERDICT CALMLY

He Is a Dangerous Man to the State Says Justice Mills in His Decision

White Plains, N.Y., Aug. 12.—Harry G. Thaw's latest attempt to gain his liberty met with complete and dishartening defeat today when Supreme Court Justice Isaac N. Mills dismissed the writ of habeas corpus and declared that "the release of the petitioner would be dangerous to the public peace and safety." The signing of the order sendng Thaw back to Matteawan, a formality which is scheduled to take place tomorrow morning in Justice Mills' chambers at Mount Vernon, is all that remans t emplete the failure of this latest appeal to the courts.

There is no crumb of comfort for Thaw in the 7,000 word opinion handed down by Justice Mills today.

All the contentions of his old adversary, District Attorney Jerome are supported and it is declared that Thaw is still insane, still suffering from persstent delusions and still as much a paranoiac as on the day he shot Stanford White. The order for Thaw's recommittment will be presented to Justice Mills tomorrow morning by Deputy Attorney General Ezra P. Prentice and Attorney Morchauser will then have a chance to oppose it or strive for modificaton. Such action, however, will, it is believed, be purely formal in view of the decisive nature of the opinion handed down today

Thaw, waiting in the White Plains jail at the rear of the court house, where the decsion was filed, received the news with outward calmness, which appeared however more forced than rel. The members of his family and his attorney seemed stunndd by the thoroughness of their defeat. Thaw declined to give out any extended statement, contenting himself with the assertion that he is not disheartened and would at once continue hisfight for liberty.

"My next effort," he said, "will be centered upon the court of appeals through which I expect to secure a hearing before a jury in my effort to have my commitment to Matteawan set aside."

The case before the court of appeals to which Thaw referred, is one which has been under consideration for sometime. It came before Justice Mills last October when Thaw applied for an order setting aside his commitment on the ground that the court which had committed him, was without power to issue such an order inasmuch as Thaw at the time was not on trial on a question of sanity. At the same time, he asked to have the question of his mental condition submitted to a jury. When Justice Mills promptly denied this application, the case was carried to the apellate division which sustained Justice Mills. Thaw's attorney has already made a second appeal and it is upon this appeal that Thaw says his efforts will now be based.

Justice Mills in his opinion today reaches three formal conclusions: Thaw was insane when he killed White; that he has not yet recovered; and that the public peace and safety would be endangered by the setting him at large. He upholds District Attorney Jerome's contentions that Thaw still cherishes delusions regarding the practices of Stanford White and his associates. He characterizes Evelyn Thaw's tale of the Madison Square Tower room and similar stories about White told at sanity hearing as "wild and grossly improbable, evidently to any moral mind grossly exaggerated."

He asserts his belief in the testimony of Susan Merrill, regarding Thaw's alleged perverted practices and points out contrast between Thaw's chivalrus attitude as a protector of young American womanhood and his private life.

Justice Mills expressed deep sympathy for Mrs. Mary CopleyThaw, the prisoner's mother and her exposition of the "horrors of Matteawan" on the stand evidently prompted his recommendation that Thaw be allowed greater privileges at that institution.

UNDER THE SEA 20 CENTURIES

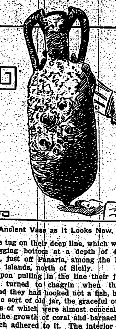
Boston.—Here is a vase which is well worth study, for if the stories told about it are true, it is a find of interest to archeologists, for it probably dates back to at least the year 126 B. C. It is now in the possession of John Quadara, of Somerville, and he has been offered $400 for it, but has spurned the offer, claiming he desires to retain it for himself.

The story of the vase, as he tells it, is interesting in the extreme. He says that four years ago this month, Sicilian fishermen plying their calling were one day delighted to feel a severe tug on their deep line, which was dragging bottom at a depth of 450 feet, just off Panaria, among the Lipari islands, north of Sicily.



Ancient Vase as It Looks Now.

Upon pulling in the line their joy was turned to chagrin when they found they had hooked not a fish, but some sort of old jar, the graceful outlines of which were almost concealed by the growth of coral and barnacles which adhered to it. The interior of the vase was filled with mud, which made it very heavy and had given rise to hopes of a large fish, when they first hooked it.

The vase bore every evidence of having been on the bottom of the sea for centuries, but that fact did not greatly impress the fishermen, who, however, did think enough of it to carry it ashore. Later they carefully chiseled away as much of the marine growth from its sides as possible, as well as from the inside neck, and then worked the mud out from the bowl of the vase. This done, they considered its appearance much improved.

They were about to present it to a wealthy merchant of the Panaria island when they changed their minds. It was the sight of a small sum of money which caused this alteration in their plans.

John Quadara had taken a vacation from his little shoe shop in Somerville and had gone to Italy to visit the scenes of his boyhood. While at Sicily he learned of the vase found by the fishermen and went to see it. He is no authority on ancient relics, but he had an idea that the vase was worth something. Learning the fishermen intended giving it away, he offered a small sum for it, and it became his property.

The jar is of plain red earthenware, the inside of the neck apparently plainly showing the handiwork of the artist who wrought it, despite its partial coating of marine growth. The inside of the bowl seems much smoother, almost too smooth to have been done by hand, and it is as clean as if fresh from the pottery. The owner accounts for this by the fact that it has so long been filled with mud from the bottom of the sea.

Whether or not the vase really dates back to 126 B. C., it is a highly interesting bit of pottery and the design is somewhat unique for these times.

CITY TO WAR WITH DISEASE

WINONA TO SPRINKLE STREETS IN BATTLE WITH INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

ORIGINATES FROM THE HORSES

Deposits on Streets Held Accountable for Destructive Plague, Which Is More Prevalent Than Ever Before.

Winona.—Confronted by thirty-one cases of infantile paralysis and a rapidly increasing epidemic throughout the suburban parts of this city, the city council convened in extraordinary session and ordered the streets of Winona to be sprinkled day and night.

Members of the health department and physicians of the city generally agreed that the present epidemic appears to originate from the blown deposits of horses on the dry streets. Twelve years ago a sweeping epidemic of a disease of almost the same diagnosis affected horses in this vicinity and has appeared since. From this source it is believed the infection of the city has resulted.

The health department here was in communication by wire with the authorities at Eau Claire, Wis., where an epidemic was suffered last year. Eau Claire said that they had sprinkled the streets when confronted with the epidemic, which included about 100 cases, but were not prepared to say that the sprinkling stayed the epidemic.

The city health department presented a map indicating where the thirty-two cases in the city are located, demonstrating that only one case was within the daily sprinkling districts.

Sprinkling Permits.

Thirty of the cases are in the outlying districts, some outside the city limits, and the local health board used this coincidence as an argument that sprinkling of the streets seemed to prevent the disease.

There has been no rain in this city for a month, and the streets are dry and dusty, the wind catching the rubbish on the pavements and blowing it over playing children and even into homes. It is the intention to sprinkle the streets day and night until rain falls.

The disease here seems to appear in the evening when the child is going to bed as a fever. This fever turns to a chill. The child is naturally given much water. In the morning the lower limbs are paralyzed. The disease here has attacked only children under sixteen years of age and appears only in July and August.

MORE LAND FOR MINNEOPA.

Purchase of Thirty Additional Acres Authorized by Iverson.

Mankato.—As a result of a visit to the state public park at Minneopa by State Auditor Iverson, several improvements will be made. His visit was for the purpose of investigating the purchase of about thirty acres additional land, which will increase the size of the park to a trifle over one hundred acres. The park never looked prettier, and Mr. Iverson left orders for the purchase of the additional land. An attempt will be made to secure the old roadbed of the Omaha railway for an auto track to the park, and it was decided to pipe the water from a flowing artesian well half a mile distant into the park for the use of visitors.

MORE ON WHITE BEAR BANDIT.

Pohl Is Believed to Have Been in U. P. Holdup.

St. Paul, Minn.—That Robert Pohl, the lone bandit who made such a desperate and reckless effort to rob the First State bank of White Bear village Thursday was one of the five bandits who held up a Union Pacific train a few miles out of Omaha, Neb., in June, has been practically established by Chief J. J. O'Connor, of the St. Paul police department.

One of the five men who pulled off that job was known as Robert Pohl and yesterday when Bertillion Expert Murnane, of the St. Paul police department, had completed his measurements and description of Robert Pohl, they tallied with those of the Robert Pohl who was one of the gang that committed the Omaha train robbery.

Standing thirty yards away Hanlin hurled a stone with such accuracy that it struck the bird squarely on the head. The hawk measured four feet six inches from tip to tip.

BELTRAMI INQUIRY PRESSED.

County Auditor First of Accused Officers to Face the Fire.

Bemidji.—The hearing of the charges against County Auditor Wilmann and Commissioners Wright, Sibley and Danaher began before Commissioner M. E. Ryan, of Brainerd. Assistant Attorney General Smith was present, having been appointed by Governor Johnson to see that the facts were properly developed.

The first matter taken up was charge No. 1 against County Auditor Wilmann for nonfeasance in office through neglect to record properly the proceedings of the county board. The books were introduced by the state to substantiate its claims. E. E. McDonald, of Bemidji, is attorney for Wilmann and Danaher, and P. J. Russell represents Wright.

M. F. Kain, deputy public examiner, was the first witness, and stated that four roads had been established in 1907, none of which had been recorded in the road record books of the county, although books for this purpose were kept on hand.

When cross-examined by Mr. McDonald an attempt was made to show that the large amount of work required of the auditor made it impossible for him to keep this record, and that it was not the duty of the auditor to record the work according to the statutes of 1897 and the code of 1905, which prescribes that commissioners may pay not to exceed 10 cents a folio for this work.

M. D. Stoner, former county surveyor, testified that the roads in question had been properly laid out and the work done according to law.

STATE PRISON IS PRAISED.

Warden Jones, of Ohio, Speaks Highly of Minnesota's System.

"The manufacture of binder twine in the state prison at Stillwater is the finest means of employing prisoners that I have ever seen," said T. H. B. Jones, warden of the state penitentiary at Columbus, Ohio, who is at the West Hotel while stopping on his way to the convention of prison wardens at Seattle. Mr. Jones spent a day at the Minnesota state prison last week.

"The work of making the twine is not physically hard upon the prisoners," he continued. "It makes excellent labor for them. It is also a great thing for the state, as I was told at the prison that the twine mill received more orders than it could fill. It is unusual for a state penitentiary to get such good returns for the labor of its prisoners. The warden, Mr. Wolfer, appeared to be a very proficient man, and the whole establishment showed the results of his care and ability.

"In Ohio we are having all kinds of trouble to find employment for the inmates of our penitentiary, as the legislature has just ruled against all prison products that interfere with the articles manufactured by union labor. We had about 1,700 prisoners when I left, and it was a great problem to find work to keep them busy.

"There is hope that conditions will soon be better, however, as the legislature will let us supply a great many of the needs of the other state institutions. In addition to this we will be allowed to manufacture desks for public schools, which will keep a large number at work.

Bitter Contest Enlivens Congress of Reclamationists in Session at Spokane

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 11.—The Ballinger Pinchot contest burst upon the National Irrigation Congress today. Dr. George Pardee, former governor of California attacked Richard A. Ballinger, secretary of the interior, with a fierceness only seconded by that of former Senator George Turner of Washington, who defended the secretary.

Mr. Ballinger entered the auditorium surrounded by a reception committee and when he arose to speak he was cheered for several minutes. He read from a paper his ideas on reclamation and the public domain. He contended that what has been done by the secretary of the interior was under the alw.

Mr. Ballinger after his address would not be disturbed by questions There is a little note on the published program inviting the delegates to ask questions and enter a discussion with the speakers.

Ballinger was not aware of this.

John Fairweather, of California asked a question. The secretary answered it and then left the platform.

Former Governor Pardee took the platform to deliver the address under the subject assigned to him. But he had no use for his manuscript. He opened by saying that he was for Roosevelt and his policies.

"Roosevelt was a president who did things first" said he, "and talked about them afterwards and that's the kind of men we would like to see in public office now."

Pardee told of the activities of former Secretary Garfield, who under the instructions of President Roosevelt withdrew from public entry many tracts of land under the belief that these lands should be held for the people. Now, said he, Secretary Ballinger has again put up for entry these lands and each tract has within its boundaries a water power site.

GRUESOME EVIDENCE.

Exhibition of Skulls Is Made in Sutton Inquiry.

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 11.—A gruesome feature was this afternoon introduced into the proceedings of the court of inquiry into the death of Lieutenant James N. Sutton, Jr., of the United States Marine Corps, when the legal representative of Mrs. Sutton, the mother of the dead lieutenant, brought to the witness stand Dr. Edward M. Schaeffer of Washington, an expert on gun-shot wounds.

The people in the room, spectators and interested parties alike, crowded around the table and gazed with interest upon the doctor while he placed upon the table glistening skulls to the exterior of one of which he affixed in little lumps of wax, steel rods intended to indicate to the members of the court the course of the bullet in the skull of Lieutenant Sutton.

Lieutenant Adams had given a dramatic illustration of the position of Lieutenant Sutton when the fatal shot was fired. The doctor was equally dramatic as he stretched himself upon the table and showed by pantomime, how, in his opinion as an expert, it was impossible that Lieutenant Sutton ever could have fired into his own head the shot that put an end to his life.

SON SHOOTS FATHER.

Murder Follows Dispute Over Funeral Bill.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 11.—J. G. Ostby, a prominent Duluth Grocer was shot and killed by his 18-year-old son at his home this afternoon.

The son was immediately placed under arrest and declined to make any statement as to the causes leading up to the tragedy. At the Ostby home however, it was learned that Mr. and Mrs. Ostby had indulged in a rather heated argument over the funeral bill of one of their children who died about a month ago, Ostby asserting that it should not have been $200. The son entered into the conversation and took issue with his parent. The argument become more heated whereupon the son rushed to a bed-room, procured a revolver and fired at his father, the bullet taking effect in the brain and the victim expiring on the spot. Ostby has been a grocer here for many years and did a large business. Until recently young Ostby was a member of the Duluth High school where he stood high with the faculty and was considered a promising student.

THE CASE of JIM DISMUKES

A CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE STORY

"I HAVE attempted to vary these stories of circumstantial evidence," said Judge Sturgis at the weekly meeting of the Calf Skin club, "by putting in my little contribution to this symposium in the style of fiction. The facts, however, are drawn from my own experience. As it is my first attempt at anything outside the paths of legal literature I crave the indulgence of you all. With your permission I will read my story." The judge then read the following narrative in a manner that showed he had not, during his years on the bench, forgotten his early skill before a jury.

Jim Dismukes sat in mute resignation and stared into the face of the judge; that stern yet sometimes kindly old face that meant so much to Jim. He wondered in his simple way why there should be so much of trouble and so much of solemnity about so unimportant a member of the community as himself. He wondered more than all why that terrible, unknown thing called the law had seen fit to drag him from his little log home and keep him through those long months shut up behind the barred windows of the modest county jail while, except for the doubtful attention of "Bill," his half-grown boy, the little ten-acre patch might be growing up in ragweed and cocklebur.

Of course Jim knew that one dark and forbidding night a traveler tramping homeward along the little frequented highway that ran into the timber just beyond his place had stumbled over the body of young Arthur Ballard. Jim knew people said Ballard had been murdered. He knew when he went with the crowd to look at the body by the dim, early morning light, he had seen that reeking, horrible gunshot wound in his breast, and he had trembled and grown pale. He knew he was charged with firing the shot that made that wound. And Jim also knew, deep down in his own heart, whether or not this charge was true. Jim knew, and this knowledge it was now the duty of a judge, twelve men and a state's attorney to drag forth.

As Jim sat before those terrible inquisitors and watched the changing play upon the countenance of the judge a tow-headed, stubby-nosed baby slid from his mother's lap, negotiated the distance to Jim upon all fours, and began the perilous ascent of his long and awkward legs. Jim bent over and patted the little head, but Sally Ann grabbed the child to her lap again with the whispered injunction:

"There now, Buddy isn't bother pappy. Pappy's busy."

"Pappy" was indeed busy.

The last man of the panel had just been accepted by both sides.

"I wish I had 11 more just like him," thought Clay Sheppard, the young and ambitious state's attorney, as he passed the veniremen over to the defense.

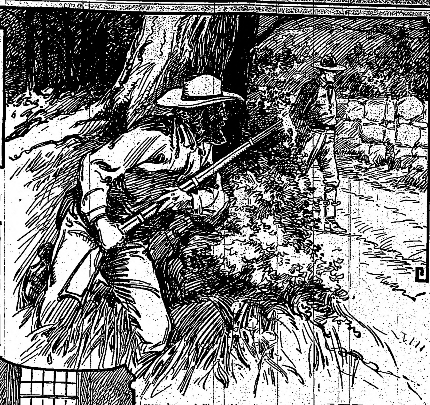
"I can trust him at least to give Jim a square deal," thought old Tom Robinson who had volunteered to save Jim, if possible, simply because he couldn't help doing kind deeds any more than he could help living.

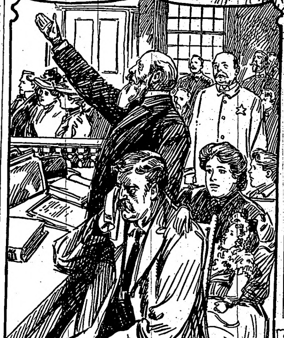
The twelfth man truly was an ideal juryman. In a small community the questioning of a venireman is largely a matter of form. Either the state or the defense can tell long before the trial by looking over the list of veniremen what men they would like to have on the jury. Amos Watson was one of those who would have been picked in advance by both sides. A farmer of expansive acres, which lay in the high priced prairie beyond the timber of which Jim's place was a clearing, he was identified with all that was progressive in the community. He was a deacon in the church, a director in the bank, an officer in the county fair association, and, in fact, held most of those honors which, beyond the city, are the capstones of success. He was indeed an ideal juryman. In the city he would have been challenged for cause, for, with all the rest of his good qualities, he was intelligent.

The attorney for the state then arose for his opening. As he described with the minutest detail Jim's movements upon the fatal night, Jim writhed and would have given all the world, yes, even his precious ten acres, to have escaped the stares that seemed to burn into the back of his wrinkled neck. At the same time he vaguely wondered how the state's attorney knew things about him that he didn't know himself.

Then old Tom Robinson brought tears to Jim's eyes as he referred casually to Jim's "devoted wife, his honest faced boy, soon to grow into manhood and the little innocent babe that prattled at its father's knee." Older and sterner eyes than Jim's would be bathed in tears when Old Tom Robinson returned to this motif in his closing appeal.

And the evidence began to pile up that sent Jim farther and farther away from the little log home and the ten acre patch. Circumstantial all of it, but each link forged and polished into a perfect chain that it would take a stronger hand than Jim's to break. There was the quarrel over the sucking pig that young Ballard killed while driving over the big prairie farm in his light top buggy to hit it up with the boys in town. There was the story of Jim's waylaying him, as with a companion, he dashed back again late in the night, and much the worse for his evening's "fun," of Jim's catching his horse's bridle and demanding payment for the worthless runt; and then of the cruel, stinging back-handed cut across the face with Ballard's buggy whip and Jim's sullen threat "to git even with the damned stuck-up ef he had to fill him full of buckshot."





And there was the evidence of Ballard's often walking home past Jim's house and through the timber, when, with the open-heartedness that was one of his many weaknesses, he had loaned the mare and buggy to some one of his cherished town companions; of the finding of the body just beyond the Dismukes fence corner; yes, even the marks of feet that Jim's boots fitted so exactly.

Then the state's attorney sprung the star witness, a mute one but with a story so plain that duller jurymen than these 12 could have read it from afar. It was but a circular bit of newspaper probed by the doctor from the wound in Arthur Ballard's breast. Alone it meant nothing. Fitted into the newspaper found under the Dismukes family bed, with every indenture interlacing with a nicety that could never have been accidental, it was as damning as the warrant of death itself. Then there was the muzzle loading shotgun behind the door, freshly fired, according to the firm opinion of well qualified experts in the person of local sportsmen and the village gunsmith.

What had Jim Dismukes to offer to all this crushing weight of evidence? What mattered it though he declared in an aggrieved tone to the judge, whom he persisted in addressing instead of the jury:

"Jedge, I found that paper the mornin' I went to look at the corpse. I fetched it home fer Bill's jest learnin' t' read an' I thought as how he mought spell out some o' the news t' me an' his ma. I jest shoved it under the bed an' fergot all about it. As fer shootin' the gun, I reckon that part's kerrect. I shot her enamost every day, an' we hed rabbit thet evenin' by reason of me shootin' it. But I ain't never kilt nothin' but critters an' varmints 'ith thet gun. Honest, I ain't jedge."

Of what avail was the evidence of young Bill that on the night in question his father had not left the house but had sat up nearly all the night blowing tobacco smoke into young Bill's ear for the ear ache. But then what match was young Bill for an astute and ambitious state's attorney. It might have been some other night that young Bill had the ear ache. He had it many times, and young Bill wasn't very strong on the calendar, anyway. The evidence of Sally Ann might have corroborated that of her first born, but a wise and beneficent law holds such evidence prejudicial to the minds of jurymen, and a wife cannot come to her husband's aid in such a dire extremity.

The usual character witnesses, the last ditch of a tottering cause, put in the usual evidence that Jim Dismukes had always borne a good reputation in his neighborhood for peaceableness and quiet, and this evidence was duly torn to pieces under the cross fire of the prosecution.

When the arguments came at last Jim again sank down as far as possible in his cane-bottomed chair and stared in wonder and admiration at the ambitious young state's attorney as he writhed and perspired in a burst of oratory that painted Jim Dismukes a terrible, blood-sucking monster going up and down the earth seeking whom he might devour; as he threw back his long black hair and raised his trembling hands to the cracked ceiling and called down the vengeance of high heaven upon the foul murderer of Arthur Ballard.

Jim wondered if God could see the state's attorney through the cracks in the plaster. Sally Ann hugged Buddy to her breast and wept softly. Old Tom Robinson hoped the jury saw her.

And then everybody wept when old Tom rose and got his foot on the soft pedal. Even the judge buried his head in the record before him and blew his nose tunefully. The state's attorney began to wonder if being the stern avenger of an outraged law was such an honor, after all.

Jim listened intently to the judge's instructions, but could make neither head nor tail of them. Something about mallets, he thought, but he couldn't remember anything about mallets, and he had understood all along it was a shotgun. But the judge knew better than he did, perhaps.

When the jury filed off into the little room back of the judge's rostrum, the tension broke and the court room hummed like a hive of bees. Above the hum could be heard the scratch, scratch, scratch of the judge's pen as he wrote up the chancery record.

Jim felt like a shipwrecked sailor who had a breathing spell in his fight for life during a lull in the storm. He played with the crowing and strenuous Buddy and when he thought nobody was looking seized and pressed Sally Ann's work-worn hand.

The minutes dragged into hours, and the jury had not returned. The judge fidgeted and finally sent a bailiff to inquire if the jury wished any further explanation of the law. As the shadows through the small paned windows lengthened into evening, the word came that the 12 were in hopeless disagreement. Something at the judge's waistband reminded him that his supper was getting cold and he ordered the jury in. The whisper went round that they stood 11 for conviction and one for acquittal. Only mental telepathy can explain how news like this flies through a crowded court room.

The judge was angry. He had two powerful motives for anger, his spoiled and sodden supper and the double cost to the county in another trial. He mentioned only one of these, however, in his scathing rebuke to the 12 men that stood before him. He reminded them that they had failed in their sworn duty and were unworthy to bear the name of citizen.

"May I have the permission of the court to say a few words," he began. "Eleven men on this jury are not deserving of this rebuke. One man deserves it all and more. I am that man. I have held out in this case for acquittal and as my fellow jurymen labored with me to bring me to their way of thinking I have fought out a battle with myself and my maker. It has been a fight that has extended beyond this court room back six months to the time of the death of young Arthur Ballard. It has been with me waking and sleeping. But now, thank God, I have won the victory and I am ready to tell this court why I could not consent to the conviction of Jim Dismukes for murder. It is only because he is innocent. I killed Arthur Ballard!"

There was a hush, and then a murmur and then a roar which it took the combined rappings of the sheriff and all his deputies to quell.

"Go on, Mr. Watson, tell what you have to tell," sternly comanded the judge, as the "ideal juryman" stood and mopped his brow.

"Yes, judge, I will tell it all. I killed Ballard. I waited for him in the bushes by the side of the road where I knew he would pass, and I shot him down. So certain did I seek to make good my work that when I recalled that my shotgun had been loaded for some time, I drew the load as I waited and put in a fresh one, wadding it with a piece of newspaper. The rest of the newspaper I threw into the bushes, and Jim told the truth when he said he found it there. It is true that Jim's boots fitted in the tracks, and I wonder that Tom Robinson did not inquire where Jim got his boots. Well, I gave them to him."

"When Jim was arrested I wanted to tell, but I could not. I put the terrible truth off from day to day. Always tomorrow I was going to lift the weight from my mind, but I looked at my position in the community, at my family and at all the things that mean so much to a man and I could not.

"When I found myself drawn on the jury the devil tempted me to accept and secure Jim's acquittal. Then he would be free and no one would ever know. But the evidence was so strong that my arguments were weak against my fellow jurymen. I knew then that the truth had to come out. I knew that another jury would hang Jim. And then, thank God, the victory was given to me and if you knew the load of remorse and agony that the telling has lifted from my shoulders you would not wonder at my coolness."

"But, Mr. Watson, you had a motive, a strong motive?" queried the judge.

"Yes, judge, I had a motive, a strong motive. You have a daughter, judge. So have I. You would not want to see your daughter's name dragged in the mire of a case like this. Neither do I. But I had a strong motive."

"James Dismukes is discharged from the bar of this court, and the court regrets the injustice that has been put upon him. The sheriff will take Amos Watson into custody. I'm sorry for you Amos. I'm glad for you, Jim," said the Judge, hastily.

"I knew Mr. Robinson would fetch 'em," cried Jim Dismukes, loyal to the last as he lifted Buddy in his big strong hands and kissed the dirty, chubby face.

It would not be becoming in the author of these narratives to mention the reception accorded by the Calf Skin club to Judge Sturgis' story.

"And were you the judge?" queried half a dozen members in unison.

"No, gentlemen," answered Judge Sturgis. "I was the ambitious young state's attorney."

WANTS TO DIE POOR

Dr. Pearsons About to Give Away Last of His Wealth.

Has Donated $4,000,000 to Smaller Colleges and Universities During Last 25 Years—Won Riches in Real Estate.

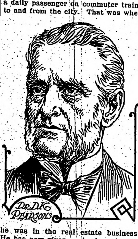
Chicago.—Dr. Daniel K. Pearsons is going, in a way, to outdo Andrew Carnegie. He is going to give his last million dollars away before the fourteenth of next April, when, nothing happening, he will celebrate his ninetieth birthday. He will keep only a sum which he thinks is sufficient to pay his simple way for the few years longer he expects to live.

When he gives away his last million he will have disposed of $5,000,000 in the last 25 years. The greater part of it has been unloosened in the last 15 years. His policy is to give to the small college. The wealthy institutions, with powerful alumni associations, receive none of his money. He believes the small and needy denominational colleges throughout the country are doing more for the poor boy and turning out a better class of American citizens than the more celebrated universities.

For 60 years Dr. Pearsons has been a noted character in and about Chicago. He is more than six feet in height, and not even his 89 years have eradicated the atmosphere of physical and mental power which he carries. His early education was limited to a short college course which proved of great value to him in his subsequent successful career.

He has no family, and but few distant relatives. So far the only objection to his philanthropy has come from institutions that for one reason or another failed to get his money.

In a quaint, ancient house in the suburb of Hinsdale Dr. Pearsons lives. It is embowered in massive trees, with a wide sweep of lawn studded with flowers. For scores of years he was a daily passenger on commuter trains to and from the city. That was when he was in the real estate business. He has now given up business and is devoting all his time to solving the puzzle how to give away his money so that it will do the most good.



This last ten hundred thousand dollars he has announced he will give to Chicago. His home city has been cut out of his benefactions largely because there are no small colleges in it. He refuses to say how he is going to give his last million or who will be the beneficiary.

In all 47 colleges in 24 states have shared Dr. Pearson's money. All he asks is that they be Christian colleges. There is no discrimination because of denomination or creed. Whitman college has received $300,000, Beloit college $500,000, Mount Holyoke college $150,000, Chicago Theological seminary $280,000. These represent his largest four gifts. From $25,000 to $100,000 has been given to small and comparatively unknown colleges in Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri and many other states.

He takes special interest in the Whitman college at Walla Walla, Wash. He rescued it 12 years ago from bankruptcy. It is now thriving and draws students from Idaho and Montana, as well as the state of Washington. This week he sent $50,000 to Whitman and $15,000 to Huron college at Huron, S. Dak.

Dr. Pearsons made his money in real estate in the early days of Chicago. He not only dealt in city real estate, but made a specialty of farm lands. He represented the Illinois Central railway in disposing of millions of fine farms in its land grant, given by the state when the road was constructed. For almost 60 years Dr. Pearsons has been active in real estate. Investments that he made in Chicago in the early years increased a thousandfold and have now been sold.

Mr. Pearsons gives the credit for his philanthropic interests largely to his wife, who died three years ago.

"It was her idea," he said. "She was a keen business woman and she wanted what money we had to be spent as wisely as possible. Therefore we began a systematic study of the regions which seemed to be most in need of better facilities for the making of citizenship."

More than $4,000,000 has been distributed among 47 institutions. Among the colleges which have benefited are Lake Forest university, Beloit college, Knox, Chicago Theological seminary, McCormick Theological seminary, Drury college, Yankton college, Colorado college, Fargo college, Mount Holyoke seminary, Berea college, Marietta, McKendree, Grand Prairie seminary, Whitman college, Olivet college, Fairmont college, Carleton, and Anatolia college in Turkey, which has received over $100,000. At one time Mr. Pearsons had more than $150,000 loaned to needy students.

WHEN MOTHER GOES TO WORK

School Established in England Where Men Are Taught to Take Care of the Home.

The St. Pancras School for Mothers, in England, is a wise and far-seeing institution. Perceiving that women are going forth more and more every year to get votes, and clerkships, and places in shops, and so on—that, in short, a movement is beginning that bids fair to leave meals uncooked and babies untended and the homes of the nation desolate by and by—the St. Pancras School for Mothers is teaching fathers how to perform domestic duties. At a course of classes and conferences just ended workingmen have learned all sorts of useful things about hygiene of the home, and how to mix the milk for the baby, and the way to keep the children amused when the wife has gone out for the day. The reports of the school say nothing about cooking lessons for the fathers, but no doubt they will be taught this, and sewing, too.

Men are called the lords of creation, but nothing is less like a lord than a man whose wife is sick or away and who cannot afford to hire a servant. He burns the meat, and cannot find the bread knife, the baby gets the colic and he buttons Tommy's apron up wrong, and the fire goes out, and his home is a scene of woe and desolation. If that man had had lessons at St. Pancras and learned how to steer the domestic ship, probably his wife would feel more respect for him and not half so much anxiety to take the ballot out of his hands. What is there about a man, anyhow, that he should be exempt from the duties of the fireside and the training of the family he brought into the world? Let a workman lose his job and his wife goes forth and launders or chars and in between times she continues to take care of his children and the house. The man doesn't do it—unless St. Pancras has had hold of him.—N. Y. Tribune.

Wild Figs for California.

California is to try acclimating the Korean wild fig. The fig, growing on a hardy vine, on trees, trellises and hedgerows to a height of 30 feet, bears a delicious fruit. Some of the seed has been sent to the department of agriculture, California state university. The fig grows wild in Korea and has proved of great value there.

AN EASY WAY.

How to Cure Kidney Troubles Easily and Quickly.

It is needless to suffer the tortures of an aching back, the misery of backaches, rheumatic pains, urinary disorders, or risk the danger of diabetes or Bright's disease. The cure is easy. Treat the cause—the kidneys—with Doan's Kidney Pills. H. Mayne, Market St., Paris, Tenn., says: "Weak kidneys made my back stiff and lame. The urine was cloudy and irregular and I had to get up many times at night. I lost energy, became weak and could not work. Doan's Kidney Pills removed all the trouble and restored my health and strength."

Troubles Cured by Cuticura.

"When my little Vivian was about six months old her head broke out in boils. She had about sixty in all and I used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment which cured her entirely. Some time later a humor broke out behind her ears and spread up on to her head until it was nearly half covered. The humor looked like a scald, very red with a sticky, clear fluid coming from it. This occurred every spring. I always used Cuticura Soap and Ointment which never failed to heal it up. The last time it broke out it became so bad that I was discouraged. But I continued the use of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent until she was well and has never been troubled in the last two years. Mrs. M. A. ON FOOD,

The Right Foundation of Health.

Proper food is the foundation of health. People can eat improper food for a time until there is a sudden collapse of the digestive organs, then all kinds of trouble follows.

The proper way out of the difficulty is to shift to the pure, scientific food, Grape-Nuts, for it rebuilds from the foundation up. A New Hampshire woman says:

"Last summer I was suddenly taken with indigestion and severe stomach trouble and could not eat food without great pain, my stomach was so sore I could hardly move about. This kept up until I was so miserable life was not worth living.

"Then a friend finally, after much argument, induced me to quit my former diet and try Grape-Nuts.

"Although I had but little faith I commenced to use it, and great was my surprise to find that I could eat it without the usual pain and distress in my stomach.

"So I kept on using Grape-Nuts and soon a marked improvement was shown, for my stomach was performing its regular work in a normal way without pain or distress.

"Very soon the yellow coating disappeared from my tongue, the dull, heavy feeling in my head disappeared, and my mind felt light and clear; the languid, tired feeling left, and altogether I felt as if I had been rebuilt. Strength and weight came back rapidly and I went back to my work with renewed ambition.

"To-day I am a new woman in mind as well as body, and I owe it all to this natural food, Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

Harry Thaw has probably found out that it is easier to play crazy than to simulate sanity.

The Aldrich theory is that we ought to have a tariff revision by its friends and for its friends. All the people are asked to do is to pay the freight.

The St. Cloud Journal Press says, "The Payne bill seems to have been well named judging from the groans from the interior of the country."

It is said that Harry Thaw has obtained contracts to the value of $12,000 for his literary output. This would indicate that the public, not Thaw, is crazy.

It will be something new for the republicans of Minnesota to prosecute a campaign of apology. It will also be surprising if the voters accept the apology.

Harry Thaw is to stay at the Matteawan asylum, and the public is inclined to accept this as a righteous verdict. No man is entitled to liberty who is a menace to the public.

From news dispatches it appears that many villages in Spain have declared themselves republics, and some of them are expected to last until the king's troops reach them.

As the result of a law passed by the 1907 legislature the state board of equalization is no longer in existence, and this year for the first time the assessments of the various counties will be equalized by the state tax commission. It is argued that as the tax commission has permanent offices and a force of statisticians and clerks at its command this body is better qualified to equalize the taxes

To be qualified for governorship of Minnesota it is unnecessary to publish a birth certificate, a marriage license or graduation papers. Some things, particularly all of these, are taken for granted.

Hunters will do well to remember that the prairie chicken season opens September 7th this year. The opening date has been made a week later in order to make the law uniform with North Dakota statutes.

Julius Schmahl is quoted in an interview as saying hosiery is a luxury and can stand an increased tariff. If Julius will only come up to Red Lake County and interview some of our mothers of twelve children he might be induced to change his opinion.

The St. Paul republicans are to give a reception at the state capitol to the Minnesota congressional delegation, excepting of course, Jim Tawney. Why not hold this lovefeast on September 18th and have President Taft come over from Minneapolis.

Jupiter Pluvius seems to have been cutting up some antics in the western part of the state lately and crops have been seriously damaged in the neighborhood of Moorhead and Breckenridge. Fortunately the hard rains did not strike the upper part of the Red River Valley.

After all is said and done Congressmen Lindbergh and Davis are the only republican members of the Minnesota delegation entitled to credit for voting against the Aldrich tariff bill. The other members voted for Cannon for speaker and Cannon's election made possible the infamous Aldrich bill. The people understand this and they will not allow any of the defaulting congressmen to creep under the tent of the big show. In the last campaign the battle cry was "A vote for Cannon is a vote against the people," and the truth of this charge has been verified in the result of the work of the late congress.

THE CALL OF THE WEST.

Since the Seattle speech Governor Johnson's presidential stock has gone up several points. Certain interests in the east have tried to make it appear that the Governor is preaching a new sectionalism, but the average voter will not be fooled by that sort of criticism. Governor Johnson urges the west and south to get away from the domination of Aldrich and his Wall Street masters. And the eastern farmer, laboring man and merchant has the same interest in opposing the thraldom of the Rhode Island senator as have the people of other sections of the country.

As indicating that not all of the people in the east oppose the Johnson doctrine, we quote from the New York American as follows:

"If the disintegrated and drifting democracy has any chance of revival and reunion, it must be behind some leader clear and definite like Johnson of Minnesota.

"He is the only governor calling himself a democrat who has convictions and the courage of them. He does not fear to take oppositions. He does not hesitate to challenge prejudices. He does even dare to point his party beyond the line of tradition to the goal of independence and of common sense.

"There is good stuff in Johnson and a good ring to his voice, and a clear head on his shoulders and a good, stout heart in his bosom.

"And John Johnson of Minnesota, who carried by 20,000 votes a state which gives an 85,000 republican majority, not only rings a battle cry against the tariff of privilege, for whose offensive provisions the majority of democarts in the United States senate waded over their submerged platform in support, but he challenges the common sense of the democratic fragments to rally to the ancient but discarded democratic doctrine which once built up for our country a glorious and triumphant merchant marine."

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

The Gazette's St. Paul correspondent, Paul Pry, who appears to be fairly well informed about what is going on in politics in this state and elsewhere, said last week:

"I would not be surprissed if investigation would show that the speaker was consulted before some of the Minnesota members voted against the bill, Stevens for instance, and that the tip was given that unless their votes were wanted to pass the bill they could square themselves with the people at home, who are thought not fully to appreciate the true inwardness of the situation by voting against it."

As indicating that our correspondent was "next" to the true inwardness of the situation at Washington and as indicating also the true inwardness of the attitude of the majority of the Minnesota delegation as well to the tariff as to Mr. Cannon himself, compare this with Mr. Tawney's telegram to Eli Warner, who proposes to get up a demonstration in honor of these so-called insurgents:

"Before completing your arrangements to specially honor the Republicans and the one Democrat from our state who voted against the final passage of the Payne bill, I would suggest that you ascertain how many of them pledged the President of the United States to vote for the bill if their votes were necessary to pass it. This is suggested in the most friendly spirit to the end that those who really merit the supposed honor may receive it, and that the non-partisans of St. Paul may not bestow this supposed honor unworthily."

"James A. Thawney."

Foley Independent: Do the people rule? They think they do.

Le Sueur News: Congressmen played a game of ball last week. If things continue as at present the same congressmen will be in a game of football in November 1910.

Princeton Union: In his Commoner Mr. Bryan says that the Democratic party is growing. There is no doubt of it—growing tired of running a presidential candidate who invariably meets defeat.

Ortonville Star Herald: Good roads have been delayed not lost. If there are any brains in the next legisature a way will be found by which the state can spend its own money, and this agitation will result in a more general knowledge of how to build good roads and preserve them after they are built. The supreme court has performed a good service to the state whether it gave us good law or not. There should be no more "pork barrels" with grafting attachments, but just plain, clean cut appropriations.

Northfield News: It is reported that President Taft when he makes his projected visit to Minnesota this month will take occasion in a speech at Winona to set Mr. Tawney right with the people of his district. This is no more than just, for the upward revision people owe much to Mr. Tawney. A decided stand taken by him, like that assumed by Senator Nelson or Congressman Davis, for instance, would unquestionably have resulted in the rejection of the measure by congress, for Mr. Tawney's example would have been followed by a number of waverers, who only needed a leader to inspire them with courage of their convictions. However when William H. Taft comes here and looks the ground over he is likely to find that he will need all the eloquenec at his command and then some to set the president himself right with the people of Minnesota.

The Ogden Utah Examiner would have its readers become readers of the Congressional Record as well. A perusal of the recording medium for congressional debates would furnish a verbatim report of each and every word spoken by the reader's representative in congress. In this manner, thinks the Examiner, the readers could soon draw thier own conclusions as to the real attitude of senators and representatives in congress.

The editor of the Salina (Utah) Call says in a recent issue: "If we could we would devote some of our space to the exchanges that come to our table each week. They are like good old familiar friends that come to visit. They help one. Often when we are tired and the day seems long, we drop into a chair and run through the exchanges. Herd and there is a bit of inspiration; here something to take hope from, and here something that cheers. Overshadowing them all is the paper that comes once each week from our home town, breathing always of scenes and places and people that have exprsseed us in earlier life. Blees the inchanges. An ambition is what a man thinks he could do to benefit the world; a mission is what he tries to do to support his family.

It's a pity when sick ones drug the stomach or stimulate the heart and kidneys. That is all wrong. A weak stomach means weak stomach nerves, always. And this is also true of the heart and kidneys. The weak nerves are instead crying out for help. This explains why Dr. Shoop's Restorative is promptly helping stomach heart and kidney ailments. The Restorative reaches out for the actual cause of these ailments—the failing "inside nerves." Anyway test the Restorative 48 hours. A young married man of West Duluth met a friend of his of bachelor days and invited him home to lunch. His wife was unprepared for visitors, and, calling him aside, told him that she had only one dozen oysters and that when his friend had eaten his quota of four he must not be asked to take any more.

In spite of his promise to remember, when the guest had eaten his four the host pressed him to take more. The wife looked distressed, and the friend declined.

Later the wife said to her husband:

"How could you urge him to have more oysters when I had explained to you that there weren't any more?"

"I'm very sorry" said the penitent husband, "but I forgot all about it."

"Forgot all about it? What do you suppose I was kicking you under the table for?" asked the wife.

"But you didn't kick me" said the husband and the wife nearly fainted. —Duluth News Tribune.

S.S.S. FOR BAD BLOOD

The most important part of the human system is the blood. Every muscle, nerve, tissue, bone and sinew is dependent on this vital fluid for nourishment and strength necessary to maintain them in health and enable each to perform the different duties nature requires. Even the heart, the very "engine" of life, receives its vigor and motive power from the blood. Since so much is dependent on this vital fluid it can very readily be seen how necessary it is to have it pure and uncontaminated if we would enjoy the blessing of good health. Bad blood is responsible for most of the ailments of mankind; when from any cause it becomes infected with impurities, humors or poisons, disease in some form is sure to follow. Muddy, sallow complexions, eruptions, pimples, etc., show that the blood is infected with unhealthy humors which have changed it from a pure, fresh stream to a sour, acrid fluid, which forces out its impurities through the pores and glands of the skin. A very common evidence of bad blood is sores or ulcers, which break out on the flesh, often from a very insignificant bruise or even scatch or abrasion. If the blood was pure and healthy the place would heal at once, but being loaded with impurities, which are discharged into the wound, irritation and inflammation are set up and the sore continues. Bad blood is also responsible for Anaemia, Boils, Malaria, etc.; the weak, polluted circulation cannot furnish the nourishment and strength required to sustain the body, and a general run-down condition of health results. S. S. S. is nature's blood purifier and tonic; made entirely of healing, cleansing roots and herbs. It goes down into the circulation and removes every particle of impurity, humor or poison that may be there, restores lost vitality, and steadily tones up the entire system. It adds to the blood the healthful properties it is in need of, and in every way assists in the cure of disease. S. S. S. neutralizes any excess of acid in the blood, making it fresh and pure, and permanently cures Eczema, Acne, Tetter, and all other skin diseases and eruptions. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Malaria, and all other diseases or disorders arising from bad blood. Book on the blood and any medical advice desired free to all who write.

Your S. S. S., in my opinion, is as good a medicine as can be had; it simply cannot be improved upon as a remedy to purify and enrich the blood and to invigorate and tone up the system. This spring my blood was bad and I was run down in health, and having seen your medicine highly advertised I commenced its use. Today my blood is in fine condition and my general health is of the best. Am filling position as fireman for a large concern here, and if I was not in good physical condition it would be impossible for me to fill the place. Your S. S. S. has been of great service to me and I do not hesitate to give it the credit it deserves.

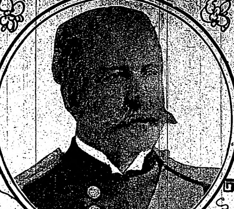
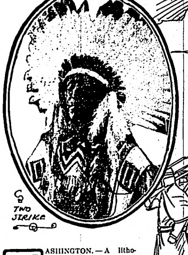
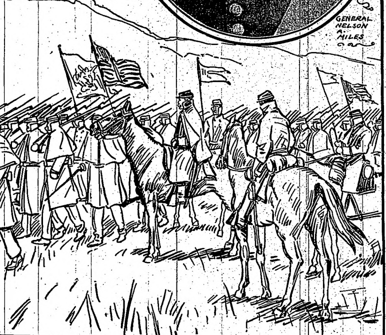
GENERAL MILES AND THE SIOUX

COPYRIGHT, 1909 BY W. A. PATTERSON







WASHINGTON.—A lithograph that has survived the attacks of time shows Gen. Nelson A. Miles and Col. W. F. Cody mounted on spirited horses and overlooking from a bluff the last great camp of the Sioux Indians when coming in from the warpath. The Sioux surrendered to Gen. Miles in January, 1891, but they came very near, a few days after the surrender, to the point of breaking away once more. The story of it is this:

Gray dawn was breaking at the Pine Ridge agency when an Indian runner broke headlong into the village of the surrendered Sioux. He stopped at the tepees of the principal warriors long enough to shout a message, and then leaving the camp where its end rested against an abrupt hill, he made his way with a plainsman's stealth to the group of agency buildings, circling which and extending beyond, crowning ridge after ridge, were the white Sibley tents of the soldiers.

Breakfast was forgotten in the troubled camp of the Sioux. The chiefs and the greater braves rushed to quick council and the lesser warriors, the squaws and the children stood waiting with dogged patience in the village streets.

The council was over. An old chief shouted a word of command that was caught up and passed quickly to the farthest outlying tepee. An army might have learned a lesson from that which followed the short, sharp order. Mounted men shot out from the village and as fast as fleet-footed ponies, pressed to their utmost, could accomplish the distances every outlying ridge was topped with the figure of rider and horse, silhouetted against the morning sky.

Every sentinel warrior had his eyes on the camps of the white soldiery. Suddenly from the east of the agency, where lay the Sixth cavalry, there came a trumpet call that swelled and swelled and ended in one ringing note that sang in and out of the valleys and then, subdued to softness, floated on to be lost in the prairie wilderness beyond.

The motionless figure of one of the hilltop sentinels was moved to instant life. A signal ran from ridge to ridge, finally to be passed downward into the camp of the waiting Sioux, who sprang into action at its coming. The pony herds of the Sioux were grazing on the hills to the west, unrestrained of their freedom by lariat or herdsman. In number they nearly equaled the people of the village, a few ponies for emergency use only having been kept within the camp. Upon the ponies in the village jumped waiting warriors, who broke out of the shelter of the tepees for the hills where the herds were foraging on the snow-covered bunch grass. It seemed but a passing moment before every pony in that great grazing herd was headed for the village. The animals were as obedient to the word of command as is a brave to the word of his chief.

During the gathering of the ponies the women of the camp had slung their papooses to their backs, had collected the camp utensils and were standing ready to strike the tepees, while the braves, blanketed and with rifles in their hands, had thrown themselves between the village and the camps of the soldiers of Gen. Miles.

The Sioux, who had surrendered less than a week before, were preparing to stampede from the agency and to make necessary the repeating of a campaign that had lasted for months. The Indian runner had brought word that Great Chief Miles had ordered his soldiers to arms early in the morning and that the surrendered Sioux were to be massacred to the last man, woman and child.

The medicine men had told the Indians that this was to be their fate and the runner's word found ready belief. Miles sent a courier with a reassuring message to the chiefs, but they would not believe.

The braves prepared to kill before they were killed and everything was in readiness for the flight of the squaws and papooses, while the warriors, following, should fight the soldiers lusting for the Sioux blood.

Gen. Miles had planned a review of the forces in the field as a last act of the campaign, and it was the order for the gathering and the marching that had been taken as an order of massacre by the suspicious Sioux.

Trumpet and bugle calls of "boots and saddles" and "assembly" burdened the air. The troopers and "doughboys" had fallen in, 5,000 strong. The column started west with flags and guidons fluttering. The head of the command, the greatest that had been gathered together up to that time since the days of the civil war, reached the bluff above the Sioux village. A shout would have started the stampede of the savages; a shot would have been the signal for a volley from the warriors lying between the white column and the village.

The soldiers passed on and the review began, but out on the hills the Indian sentinels still stood, and between the marching whites and the village were the long lines of braves still suspicious and still ready to give their lives for the women and children in the heart of the valley.

What a review was that on the snow-covered South Dakota plains that January morning 15 years ago! Gen. Miles on his great black horse watched the 5,000 soldiers pass, soldiers that had stood the burden of battle and the hardships of a winter's campaign and had checked one of the greatest Indian uprisings of history.

The First infantry, led by Col. Shafter, who afterward was in command in front of Santiago, was there that day. Guy V. Henry, now lying in peaceful Arlington cemetery, rode at the head of his black troopers, the "buffalo soldiers" of the Sioux. Capt Allen W. Capron was there with the battery that afterward opened the battle at Santiago. The Seventh cavalry was there, two of its troops, B and K, having barely enough men left in the ranks to form a platoon.

These two troops had borne the brunt of the fighting at Wounded Knee a month before when 90 men of the Seventh fell killed or wounded before the bullets of the Sioux. When the two troops with their attenuated ranks rode by, the reviewing general removed his cap, an honor otherwise paid only to the colors of his country.

The column filed past, broke into regiments, then into troops and companies, and the word of dismissal was given. The Indian sentinels on the ridges, signaled the camp in the valley. In another minute there was a stampede, but it was only that of the thousands of Sioux ponies turned loose and eager to get back to their breakfast of bunch grass on the prairies.

Two Strike, the Sioux, watched the review that day. Old Two Strike was one or the warriors who went out with a following of braves on the warpath the month previous. Two Strike wore no ghost shirt. He was above such superstition, even though he took no pains to urge his comrades to follow his shirtless example.

Two Strike was glad of the craze that had brought war, for he hated the whites harder than he hated anything on earth except the Pawnees, the hereditary enemy of his people. Two Strike knew in his soul that the buffalo were not coming back as the medicine men had declared, and that no Messiah was to be raised to lead his people against the pale faces to wipe them from off the face of the continent. What he did know was that he was to have one more chance to strike at the encroachers on the lands of his people before the enfeeblements of old age took the strength from his arm.

Two Strike was a great warrior. He had fought on many a field and he had won his name from the overcoming of two warrior foes who had attacked him when he was alone on the prairie. Single handed he had fought and killed them and "Two Strike" he had been from that day. He was the leader in the last battle which took place between hostile bands of savages on the plains of America. For years without number the two nations, the Sioux and the Pawnees, had hated each other.

In one of Cooper's novels Hard Heart, a Pawnee, taunts a Sioux thus: "Since waters ran and trees grew, the Sioux has found the Pawnee on his warpath." The fight in which Two Strike was the leader of the Sioux was fought against the Pawnees on the banks of a little stream known as "The Frenchman," in Nebraska in the year 1874.

In the valley of the Platte river the buffalo were plenty, but the Pawnees had said that the Sioux should not hunt there and they defied them to come. "The Pawnee dogs called the Sioux women," said the story-teller and old Two Strike sneered.

It was when the grass was at its best that the Sioux started for the country of the Pawnee. The teller of the tale made no secret of the intention of the Sioux to exterminate the Pawnees, sparing neither women nor children if the chance for their killing presented itself.

Two Strike and his Sioux reached the edge of the buffalo country and there they waited opportunity. They did not have to wait long. Runners told them that the Pawnees in full strength had started on a great hunting expedition led by Sky Chief, a noted warrior. When the name of Sky Chief fell from the lips of the interpreter old Two Strike smiled and closed his fist. The Sioux left their encampment and struck into the heart of the hunting country. There a scout told them that the enemy was encamped in a prairie gulch and that their women and children were with them to care for the hides and for the drying of the meat of the buffalo.

Two Strike led his men by "a way around," as the interpreter put it, coming finally to a point less than half a sun's distance from the camp in the valley. The Sioux struck a small herd of buffalo and they goaded the animals before them right up to the mouth of the gulch. When the buffalo were headed straight into the valley the Sioux pricked the hindmost with arrows and the herd went headlong toward the encampment of the Pawnees, who "were foolish men" and did not watch for an enemy.

When the Pawnees saw the buffalo they mounted their ponies and followed them out through the far end of the valley to the level plain, leaving the women and children behind.

Then the Sioux went in to the slaughter, sparing neither infancy nor age, and they had almost ended the killing when the Pawnee braves returned.

Then followed the last great battle which has been fought on the plains between tribes of red men. The story-teller in the tepee at Pine Ridge did not say so, but it is known from the account of a white man, Adabel Ellis, who knew the circumstances, that the Pawnees fought that day as they had always fought, bravely and to the death.

Sky Chief, the Pawnee, rode out in front of his men, shook his hand and called out that Two Strike, the Dakota, was a coward. Then Two Strike called back that the Pawnee was a dog's whelp and he rode out, armed with his knife, which was the only weapon Sky Chief held.

The two leaders met and fought. They dismounted, turned their ponies loose and grappled. The story-teller lingered not on the details of the fight. He said simply, "the Pawnees heard Sky Chief's death cry."

The tale ended. Two Strike rose, bared his right arm, drove his hand downward and then upward, and smiled.

ART OR NATURE?

By LUCY COPINGER

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

Anna Karenina and Sophie Bauerschmidt were sitting on the curb-stone in front of the Bauerschmidt saloon. They were talking about Miss Lucy.

"My sister," said Sophie, "seen Miss Lucy and she says she's a swell."

Sophie's sister, a creature of a very big pompadour that hung coquettishly into one eye, worked at the beauty-counter of a department store and was therefore the social oracle of the Bauerschmidt circle.

There was an element of gloom in Anna's nature that discounted for her all things pedagogical. "A swell!" she echoed disdainfully, "she aind even no lady. My mother says she aind nothing bud a working-woman. Ladies never do no work. They jusd sids all day und puds things on their faces like my mother."

"Well, anyhow," said Sophie, "Miss Luzy's got nice clothes."

"They aind so much," insisted Anna; "she aind god no silk peddicoad und she never wears no beads."

"But she's pretty, anyhow," said Sophie.

"It's the style," argued Sophie. "My sister put stuff on her hair, and some of it's red and the rest aint."

"Thad's like my mother's," Anna agreed; "but Miss Luzy's is jusd all red."

"But it's curly," wavered Sophie; "it's curly down by her ear."

"Aind you never nexd?" cried Anna, angered at such denseness. Thad aind no real curl."

"It's spit then," said Sophie.

"She puds it ub," said Anna, with finality; "I bed you she does."

"I bet you she don't," snapped Sophie.

"Whad'll you bed?" cried Anna.

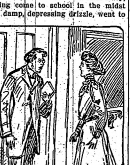
"Nothun," said Sophie femininely.

"You're afraid," Anna jeered. "I bed you a cend she does."

"I bet you a cent she don't," cried the taunted Sophie.

"All right," said Anna; "jusd waid dill id rains." Then, growing weary of Sophie's company, she departed to the more congenial pursuits of the gang.

Two days later it rained. Miss Lucy, having come to school in the midst of a damp, depressing drizzle, went to her bookcase where she kept a small looking-glass carefully hidden beneath a gilt-lettered "Teacher's Creed." The principal had often noted and approved the cheerful and long-sustained attention that Miss Lucy gave to her Creed each morning.



Painfully Shy, Woman-Fearing Young Man.

However, that morning the inspection was short. The dampness had flattened her fresh waist into a slovenly, limp garment, and the end of her nose was damp and coldly pink. Being a mere feminine creature of clothes, she slammed the bookcase door and sitting down at her desk looked gloomily and bitterly at the 60 members of Class A. Owing to the inclement weather Class A was in an unbecoming state of damp greasiness and nature, in a vain attempt to give a bath to her neglected children, had only made matters worse.

Anna Karenina looked like a wet fresh sausage and according to her usual custom in rainy weather she had taken off the blue hair ribbon that was her sole garter, thus letting both her stockings hang down over her shoes. True, her legs felt cold, but she had an idea that her stockings thus worn resembled the gaiters that Miss Lucy sometimes donned. Unlike Anna, whose morning ablutions no pleading could extend farther than the dainty wetting of a finger tip which was then cautiously applied to the corner of each eye, Bum O'Reilly every morning obligingly washed his face in a three-inch circle whose center was his nose—an oasis of cleanliness in a desert of dirt. But, unfortunately, he smelt like a very strong stogie. This odor united with the ambrosial perfume of stale beer that surrounded Sophie and the scent of coal oil with which Josef Bureschy, whose mother was vain, anointed his too sparse coiffure. In the face of this union Frederick William, whom Miss Lucy had placed in the first and nearest seat, valiantly but vainly gave forth his usual clean, soapy smell of the laundry.

Miss Lucy, as she sat and smelled the many-scented incense of Class A, felt a depressing wane of her young enthusiasm.

Just at this moment the half-closed door opened and a young man peeped shyly in. He was a timid-looking young man with pale spectacled eyes and he carried a red copybook. Miss Lucy, seeing the book, knew the young man to be the critic teacher.

This critic teacher was the dread embassy of the training school under whose kindly guidance still continued such young and tender teachers as Miss Lucy. And it was often found that after a visit from this critic teacher these same young and tender teachers must perforce hie themselves back to the school, there to study a year longer.

"He sits in your room," a teacher friend had shudderingly told Miss Lucy, "and you don't know what you are saying and everything you take hold of drops, and all the time he just sits there and writes down all your mistakes and you stay at home for a week after because you are sick."

"How silly!" exclaimed the superior Miss Lucy. "I never get nervous. If he comes in my room I shall merely greet him with my ordinary manner and go on with my usual work."

From this calm announcement we can easily imagine Miss Lucy advancing to meet the critic teacher with an ineffable condescension. Instead of which she stood still and opened her mouth several times vainly. Then she gurgled. The critic teacher, who in reality was only a painfully shy, woman-fearing young man, also gurgled. He then extended a cold and clammy hand, which was met by one equally cold and clammy. At this point a loud whisper was heard from Sophie Bauerschmidt, who suspected Miss Lucy of matrimonial designs upon every man from the janitor down. "It's Miss Luzy's beau," she explained loudly. Miss Lucy glared wildly at her and the critic teacher, sinking weakly into a chair, opened his notebook. Miss Lucy turned to her class and for a moment smiled vaguely and appealingly at them with a dreadful shadow of her "entertainment" smile. Then, suppressing a tendency to swallow all the time, she began to direct the reading lesson in a voice that reminded her of Frederick William reciting a memory gem. As for the critic teacher, still appalled by the announcement that he was Miss Lucy's beau, he sat wretchedly on the ridge of Miss Lucy's chair and wrote swiftly and constantly in his book.

At last Frederick William's turn came to read. "See kitty chump," said he. It was the first sentence in the primer and the only one he had ever mastered. He rendered it upon all occasions and it was always accepted by Miss Lucy with an indulgent smile. However, this time she shook her head. "No, dear," she said sweetly; "try again."

"See kitty chump," said Frederick complacently.

Then Miss Lucy came toward him and bending over him pointed to the first word.

It was at this moment that the stillness of the room was suddenly dispelled by a loud smack. This smack—sudden, loud and sharp—was followed by a breathless gasp from the class. Then a sound of lamentation fell upon the air.

"Anna," said Miss Lucy, instinctively, "come here. And you, Sophie, also."

Anna came sullenly, Sophie tearfully nursing a very red cheek. Miss Lucy, standing between them, glanced at the critic teacher. He had stopped writing and, pen held in hand, was evidently critically waiting the outcome of this breach of discipline."

"Anna," began Miss Lucy, "why did you strike Sophie?"

"I never done id," declared Anna.

"Sophie," said Miss Lucy, "why did Anna strike you?"

Sophie, who was rather enjoying herself, sniffed violently. "She took my cent," she said, "and I got it back and then she hit me in the jaw and, Miss Luzy, I got the toothache," finished this victim of Anna's rapacity.

"You're a liar," said Anna angrily, "and you waid dill I ged you oudside und I'll knock your block off." Then, with a sullen sob, "id was my cend anyhow. Id wasn'd even spid."

At this point Sophie, who loved an audience, broke in. "And she said you put your hair up in curl-papers at night and she said your petticoat wasn't even silk and she said you didn't have no holes in your stockings."

At these revelations Miss Lucy gasped and, sitting down hysterically upon a desk looked at the critic teacher. Outraged and horrified by the idea that he, a young man of exemplary habits, should be thus drawn into a discussion concerning feminine hosiery, the critic teacher had risen, pale and with a wild look in his eyes. For a moment he and Miss Lucy, both stricken gurgleless, looked at each other. Then seizing his hat, he turned and hastened without the portals of the depraved and immoral Class A. As the door shut upon his scandalized back, Miss Lucy, glancing toward her desk, caught sight of a red copybook lying there open. All the beautiful moral precepts that were the delight of Class A quite forgot, she clutched the copybook and feverishly turned its pages. They were all blank.

"What an awful old fake!" she exclaimed; "worse than I am;" and then, to Bum O'Reilly, "James, run and take this to the gentleman that was here just now."

Later, when the dismissal bell rang and the children were departing, Miss Lucy fastened Anna's ragged pink fascinator over her head. Then, as she gave her a gentle shove out the door, she stealthily pressed a cent into the child's dirty hand.

After which she went to the bookcase and looked at herself in the glass. Regretfully and tenderly she pulled a melancholy strand, once the pride and joy of her heart, that hung limply down by her ear. "And id wasn'd even spid," she said gloomily.

Where Turner Went to School.

During a visit to the members of the London and Middlesex Archaeological society of Brentford, Mr. Fred Turner, the local librarian, told them that after many years of patient searching of records, he had at last discovered the house where J. M. W. Turner, the artist, went to school. Turner, said the librarian, came to Brentford in 1735, and lived in a house in the historic market place, with his Uncle Marshall, who was a butcher. He went to school at a house situated in Brentford High street, now used as a clothier's shop. Mr. Turner showed the members of the association a copy of Boswell's "Antiquities of England and Wales," containing 70 plates, colored by Turner when a boy at school, for which he was remunerated at the rate of twopence a plate.—London Evening Standard.

Put Lucre Above Art.

ALL INTERESTED IN POODLE

Mark Twain Unnoticed by New York Crowd Which Was Watching Trick Dog.

The sidewalks of the avenue were thronged. Moving at a leisurely pace a continuous stream of pedestrians threw a brilliant ribbon of color as far as the eye could reach. At Forty-fourth street, at the most crowded hour, a small knot of persons had gathered, obviously intent upon the same object. A woman who was just behind the group observed the cause of this little gathering, as she supposed, and turning to her companion:

"How gratifying!" she said. "See, there is Mark Twain waiting for a bus, and so many have stopped to look at him. He has his back to them and doesn't know a thing about it. Quite a tribute, isn't it?"

But by this time the women were abreast of the group. The real object of interest obviously was something entirely different. Standing back of Mark Twain was a woman, and beside her a French poodle sitting upright, his mistress' purse held tightly in his mouth. Not one of the group had recognized the distinguished author nor had a moment for him in the absorption of watching the trick dog.—New York Herald.

On Porpoise.

A porpoise can neither play football nor yell, nor even so much as wave a flag. He can't smoke a pipe. He can act like a fool, it is true, but he can't entertain the notion that in so doing he is bright. He can't call his father the pater, nor his mother the mater. He can't merely by filling his head with the east wind get to imagine himself simply it. Why, then, do we continue to speak of schools of porpoises?—Puck.

Valuable Knowledge Spreading.

Every day sees hundreds of new recruits in the war against tuberculosis, and every day brings new methods for the fighting of the plague. The National association predicts that if the present degree of interest is maintained, within five years everybody in the United States will have been informed on the way to prevent and cure tuberculosis, and concerning the infectious nature of the disease. Two things in particular are needed, and for these the National association is working in every way. They are, a more complete registration of tuberculosis cases, and the further isolation of dangerous advanced cases of consumption.

PATHOS IN REUNION

Brothers Thought Each Other Dead for Sixty-Two Years.

They Meet in the Hoosier State for the First Time Since the Battle of Cerro Gordo in the Mexican War.

Nashville, Ind.—When Everett Johnson came here from St. Louis to visit his brother, Charles, the final chapter was written in a romance that was brought about by strange combinations and circumstances. Their meeting here was the first since the battle of Cerro Gordo, in a mountain pass of Mexico, in 1847, and the fact that each thought the other dead all these years made their meeting all the more remarkable.

The reunion of the two aged brothers was brought about by the sweethearts of their boyhood days. Charles Johnson is 81 years old and Everett is 80.

It was in West Virginia, their native state, that the romance began. There, while the two brothers were still mere lads, they began courting two young women of their own age, Miss Woods and Miss Asbury. The two young women were cousins. This courtship lasted for two years and then came the call of the great west. The two brothers decided to leave their native state and go to Kentucky. Shortly after the war with Mexico broke out and they enlisted.

After many exciting experiences in which the two brothers were ever ready to sacrifice for each other, the eve of the battle of Cerro Gordo arrived. Before entering the battle each promised that in case either was injured the other would stay by him until he recovered or until death relieved his suffering. During the battle Charles was shot. Everett saw him fall and helped carry him to the rear, where the injured man fainted and it was thought he was dying. It was in the thickest of the fight and believing his brother dead, Everett returned to the firing line.

Charles gradually recovered and after receiving his discharge went to New Orleans, where he engaged in business. At the beginning of the civil war he enlisted in the confederate army and at the close he went to the southern part of Indiana, where he was married. After his wife died, a few years ago, he set out to find the sweetheart of his boyhood days. He found that she was still in his native state, that she had been married, but that her husband had died a few years ago. He went to West Virginia and when he returned he brought back a wife, who was Miss Woods in the days before the Johnson boys left their native state.

After the Mexican war Everett Johnson went to California, where he made his fortune in the gold fields. He married and was prosperous. After his wife died he removed to St. Louis, where he met a widow, Mrs. Elizabeth Williams. He found that Mrs. Williams was once a resident of his native town, that she was once Miss Asbury, the sweetheart of his boyhood days. Three weeks ago they were married at St. Louis. Through her Johnson learned that his brother was alive and that he had married the one-time Miss Woods.

The meeting of the two brothers was pathetic. With tears streaming down their cheeks they kissed each other.

GIRLS SEEK FARMS

Has No Doubt She and Friends Will Be Able to Successfully Work 160 Acres Bought in Western Country.

Chicago.—Miss Glenna E. Lynch, president of the Dressmakers' Art club, who has left for the west to complete arrangements for taking-up a 160-acre tract which has been purchased by a number of Chicago working girls, thinks farming offers a good field for women who earn only a precarious living in the cities.

This may be something of a facer to anti-suffragists and others who think women are already going far afield from woman's realm, but Miss Lynch is in earnest about it.

"Do you regard fruit-raising as a good field for women? she was asked.

"Certainly. Why not? There are hundreds of opportunities open for young women with initiative and brains. We have invested our money in irrigated fruit lands as a business proposition and we mean to make a success of it, too," replied Miss Lynch.

"Oh, I have been told about the miles and miles of sage brush with no signs of life except jack rabbits, but I am not afraid of the prospect—or the jack rabbits, either," she declared defiantly.

Mrs. T. Vincent Morse, president of the Artcraft institute, shares Miss Lynch's views on farming as an occupation for women.

"I am trying to get a number of the girls interested in fruit farming," said she. "It offers such a good field for them to get them away from the crowded cities. The shipment of cut flowers is now an easy matter and what life could appeal to a girl more than raising flowers?"

"There are plenty of avenues open to young women besides the grind and drudgery of the factory. I am satisfied that the project will turn out to be a success and I don't know any better investment girls could have chosen.

"They are all anxious to hear the result of Miss Lynch's investigation. I have been over that country myself and I feel sure they will get a favorable report on Miss Lynch's return."

Miss Lynch was born in Rochester, Ind., and has lived in Chicago since she was five years of age. That was not such a long time ago, but she is not parading her age to the public.

"I can't afford to tell my age," she said. "It hurts the business. Some people think that young women are not capable of doing anything. A girl of 20 may know more than a woman of 50, but some people are afraid to give her a chance to show it.

"Please do not say that the members of the guild are seamstresses," she went on. "We can sew, of course, but we are not seamstresses as the term is generally understood. We are designers of gowns, millinery and household draperies. One of our members is a stenographer and another one is a florist."

SICK PIG IN AUTOMOBILE

Farmer Seeks Injunction Against Neighbor on Whose Farm Swine Fever Is Said to Prevail.

London.—An amusing case was heard at Braintree county court in an action between two local farmers. John Walker Wakelin of Marshall's farm sought to obtain an injunction against George Hunnable of Notley Lodge farm to restrain him from allowing his animals to stray upon Wakelin's farm.

Wakelin said that Hunnable had swine fever on his farm, and that on one occasion he took some pigs for a ride in his motor car to Romford. Hunnable admitted taking the pigs in his motor car to Romford, but he denied that those pigs had swine fever.

The judge refused an injunction upon Hunnable signing an agreement to use his best endeavors to keep his animals at home.

COST TOO MUCH TO PRODUCE.

Artificial Diamond Discovered Recently by French Manufacturer Has No Commercial Value.

Paris.—The diamonds which a French manufacturer, Vicomte de Boismenu, claims to have artificially produced and which have been submitted for examination to a committee of the Academie des Sciences aided by other experts, are said to be so small that it would take about 100 of them to weigh a carat.

The largest is worth only about 75 cents. Since it costs $75 to $100 to produce each stone, the discovery, however genuine, has no commercial value.

Such, at least, is the opinion of the experts engaged in the investigation.

PROTECTS THE RARE BIRDS.

Australian Government Prohibits Their Importation from Papua, Except for Scientific Uses.

London.—The Australian government informed James Buckland, whose work for the preservation of vanishing species of birds is well known, that a customs proclamation has been issued prohibiting the importation into the commonwealth from the territory of Papua of birds of paradise, goura pigeons and ospreys, "or of the skins, feathers, or plumage of any such bird."

Importation is allowed when the written consent of a principal customs officer of Papua has been obtained, but consent is only given when the birds or plumage are for a museum or a purely-scientific purpose.

Boy Is Successful Aeronaut.

Los Angeles, Cal.—A large number of spectators were greatly impressed by a successful ascension to a height of 25 feet achieved the other day by Irving Harnes, a 14-year-old boy, in his own aeroplane. The flight was made on the Thirtieth school grounds. Young Harnes' machine is of his own invention and construction. Harnes was cheered as his peculiar looking machine slowly circled about the school yard, attaining each second a greater height. What the yard had been twice circumnavigated the youth brought his craft safely to the earth.

Farm Hands Get Highest Pay.

Bloomington, Ill.—Illinois farmers have had to pay three dollars a day and board to farm hands to save their corn crop from weeds. The situation is almost without precedent.

The wages paid are far beyond what any farmer would consider in normal conditions. This year, there was no time to hunt help. Every man who came along was employed, and the hired man named the terms, and usually received his demand.

Robins Fight a Squirrel.

York, Pa.—Several robins giving battle to a red squirrel that was stealing eggs from a nest presented a spectacle at Brillhart's Station. They chased the squirrel up and down six apple trees until it finally sought shelter in a groundhog hole.

Travels in Goat Wagon.

Delphi, Ind.—John Ross of this city has left here bound for the Pacific coast in a miniature wagon drawn by a team of goats.

Several years ago Rose, who is 22 years old, lost both legs beneath the wheels of a locomotive, and since that time has depended entirely upon his little animal friends as a method of travel, driving from one town to another in this section of the state selling notions from his wagon.

Rose was last heard from at Decatur, Ill., when he stated that both he and his team were standing the trip well. He is making his way by selling lead pencils in towns along the route.

Whinny, Then You're Hungry.

Chautauqua, N. Y.—In an address here Horace Fletcher, the advocate of thorough mastication, called "that empty feeling" as meal time approaches "false hunger." "We should come whinnying to the table and watering at the mouth," said the dietary expert. He also said that table quarrels made dyspeptics.

BALK OLD SPANISH SWINDLE

Madrid.—The Spanish swindling agencies which have fleeced the innocent in all parts of the world with stories of buried treasure and legacies continue to find victims in the United States. The latest is Morgan N. Jones of Aberdeen, S. D., who will learn for the first time through this dispatch that the $1,200 he sent in the form of a draft did not fall into the hands of the swindlers, but will be returned to him by the Spanish authorities.

A decoy letter signed C. Burrel Lopez informed Jones that a relative had died in a Spanish prison, leaving a daughter in a Spanish convent. A large fortune had been found concealed in his baggage, and the man's dying request was that the relative in South Dakota would give his daughter a home and take over the management of his fortune. But there were death charges amounting to $1,200, and unless these were immediately paid the government would confiscate the dead man's money. So Jones of Aberdeen mailed the draft.

The address of C. Burrel Lopez was known, and the authorities opened the letter.

Two months ago a young lawyer from the state of Washington mortgaged his home, and, with $6,000 sewed in his undershirt, left his home to receive an involved legacy. He was instructed on reaching Gibraltar to cross to Algeciras with a blue ribbon in his buttonhole, so that the dead man's friend could recognize him.

After the lawyer left New York nothing was heard of him for several months, and his wife became frightened, fearing that he had been killed. It was reported later he returned home.

DAIRY HOUSE FOR CERTIFIED MILK PLANT

The organization of milk commissions in this country was an important step toward the improvement of the quality of milk. While the number of commissions is very limited and the milk produced under their supervision amounts to only a fraction of one per cent. of the 10,000,000,000 quarts or more of market milk annually consumed, the great value of certified milk to invalids and its influence in reducing the mortality among infants and children are beyond estimation. Further, the work of milk commissions has had no little influence in improving the general milk supply of cities where such commissions exist, by setting a higher standard of quality and by creating public sentiment in favor of pure milk.

The term "certified milk" originated with the member of the commission who formulated the plan. At the instance of the commission the word "certified" was registered in the United States patent office, the object being to protect it from being degraded by dairymen not under contract with a medical commission. It was distinctly understood, however, that the use of the term should be allowed without question when employed by medical milk commissions organized to influence dairy work for clinical purposes. Certified milk, then, in the strict sense of the term, is milk produced under a legal contract between a medical milk commission and a dairyman and which conforms to the requirements. It may be said further that milk entitled to be certified is clean and wholesome, and is obtained from healthy cows which are kept in sanitary quarters, fed wholesome food and given pure water. It is drawn from clean cows by clean, healthy attendants into clean receptacles and in a clean atmosphere. It is handled in a clean manner, cooled quickly, put into sterile vessels, placed in cold storage and iced in transportation when necessary.

After being drawn the milk is taken immediately to a separate room, where it is strained into a can through a double thickness of cheese cloth (a separate strainer being used for each pail of milk). It is then taken immediately to the bottling room, where usually it is cooled to a temperature as low as 45 to 50 degrees Fahrenheit, and in some cases as low as 35 degrees Fahrenheit. Sometimes it is strained again through absorbent cotton on reaching the cooling room. In a majority of the dairies a cooler of some description is used; in a few, however, the milk is strained into cans standing in ice water. It is then bottled, packed in cases and covered with crushed ice.

The accompanying illustrations show an arrangement of cooler and hand bottle filler, and a floor plan for a small dairy house for handling certified milk. If the barn is sanitary the dairy house may be directly attached, the weigh room serving to separate the milk room from the barn. There is probably less danger to the quality of the milk in having the dairy connected with the barn (as shown in Fig. 2), than in having these buildings separated by an open space through which the milk is carried after each cow is milked.

The coler is placed in the receiving room. After each cow is milked the milk is passed over the cooler and into the hand bottling receptacle in the bottling room. One man bottles the milk without assistance and is able to fill and cap 200 to 300 bottles an hour and place them in the store-room.

Considering the possibilities of producing certified milk with the inexpensive dairy house shown and the apparatus required for cooling and bottling, the small dairyman should be encouraged to produce certified milk.

The milk coolers in some of the dairies are so constructed that the upper coil of pipe can be filled with hydrant or well water and the lower ones with ice water or brine. The top coils remove much of the animal heat, while the lower ones reduce the milk to a temperature of 35 to 40 degrees Fahrenheit. As the milk is very much exposed in this room, the importance of the air being free from all impurities is apparent. In the best dairies this room is sterilized with steam preparatory to cooling the milk and in some instances the air entering the room is filtered through absorbent cotton or a spray of water.

Give Fowls Plenty of Range.

When hens are kept in small numbers and allowed free range, they do well anywhere. Many poultry raisers fail to meet with success when they increase their flocks because they fail to increase their accommodations in proportion. Disease often attacks flocks that are too closely confined. If you cannot afford wide range for the fowls and they must be confined, the yards should be kept clean and air-slaked lime should be scattered around frequently. Scatter straw in the yards, throwing small grains into the straw, which will give the fowls an incentive to work, and this will guard against their becoming sluggish.

Don't try to raise lice and chicks in the same coop, for the former will soon crowd out the latter.

HARVEST MITES OR "JIGGERS"

Minute Insects Cause Much Irritation and, in Cases, Sickness.

Last year, threshermen, harvest hands, workers in potteries, and apparently all classes of laborers who were obliged to handle straw in any way suffered intensely from the attacks of harvest mites or "jiggers." Horses, stabled under mows in which infested straw had been stored, were in many cases rendered frantic by the irritation caused by these minute insects. Weather conditions lately have been exceeding favorable for the development of a similar or worse plague this season.

The young mites are of microscopic size, blood red in color, and belong in the order of spiders. The immature larvae are provided with only six legs, while the adults have eight. It is the larval forms which cause annoyance. "Jiggers" are abundant in bramble thickets and on low growth in woods and along streams. They often occur in immense numbers in grain straw, sometimes causing sickness, and even death has sometimes resulted directly or indirectly from their attacks.

The Ohio experiment station recommends that so far as possible one should avoid sitting or lying in locations that are apt to be infested. Where exposure is unavoidable, dust flowers of sulphur into all the underclothing, especially into the stockings and inside the shoes. Threshermen should sift it into all their clothing.

Introducing New Blood.

Remember that inbred fowls are unsatisfactory in many respects and that they never produce as strong and healthy chicks or as strong and fertile eggs. Introduce new blood at least every second year. You will find that new blood will add much vitality to the youngsters.

Don't have any makeshift coops in your chicken business.

Praises American Woman.

Alfred East says that American women, like American machines, need but little man power. The American woman, he says, is the most chummable woman in the world, therefore she is the most charming. Our excellent educational system, he thinks, is responsible for the fact that American women are such "good fellows."

HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

SOME INTERSTING HISTORICAL FACTS

Secretary of State Historical Society Was Here Last Friday.

Interesting Story of the Origin and Meaning of Name Red Lake.

Warren Upham, secretary of the Minnesota Historical society was in this city last Friday interviewing people here who know something of the early history of the county and city. Mr. Upham is securing material for the publication of a volume "Minnesota Geographical Names" giving, the right meaning and date so far as can be ascertained of all proper names, as of towns, counties, cities,etc.

While here he got much valuable dates cncerning the early history of Red Lake coun ty to be used in the preparation of his manuscript. Mr. Upham left with the Gazette some of the "copy" that he had prepared dealing with the orgin, meaning and date of naming of the lake, river, county and city bearing the name of Red Lake. This information will be of interest to Gazette readers and is published below:

Red Lake county, established December 24,1896, is so named for the river that flows through this county, giving also its name to Red Lake Falls, the county seat. The river derives its name,in turn, from Red Lake, these both being translation of Ojibway names.

Why these Indians originally so designated the lake has been uncertain, until it was ascertained several years ago by Rev. J. A. Gilfillan. It had been affirmed, with poetic license, by Beltrami, who travelled here in 1823, publishing in 1824 and 1828, that the aboriginal names of Red Lake and its outflowing river, the latter translated by him Bloody river, refer to the "blood of the slain," in the wars between the Ojibways and Dakotas. Gilfillan, who was during about twenty-five years a missionary to the Ojibways of northwestern Minnesota, wrote in 1885 that the Ojibway name of this lake perhaps alludes to "reddish fine gravel or sand along the shore in places, which in storms gets wrought into the water near the edges," or to the reddish color of streams flowing into the lake from bogs on its north side, probaby reddened by bog iron ore. He afterward wrote, however, in a letter dated in Februray,1899, that these are erroneous conjectures of some of the Ojibways, and that he had obtained more reliable information, which he gave confidently as follows: "Red Lake is so called from the color of the lake (reflecting the redness of sunset) on a calm summer evening, when unruffled by wind and in a glassy state, at which times it is of a distinctly wine color. It is not called Red Lake from any battle fought on its its shores."

Mr. Upham says that such a name for this lake is sometimes very strongly suggested as he can testify from seeing such a tiew of the smooth lake and delicately clouded sunset sky on an evening of September, 1885. During a canoe voyage around Red Lake, he had camped for the night near the mouth of Little Sand Bar creek, at the east end of the northern part of the lake. Looking west along the glass-like mirror of its broad surface to the horizon where the water met the red and golden sky, he saw the brilliant sunset reflection in equal glory upon both the sky and lake, as he can never forget.

Red lake and Red river appear with these names, in French, on the map of Verendrye, in 1737, and on Buache's map in 1754; and the lake is so named on the somewhat later maps of Jeffrys and Carver. From information obtained during his travels in Minnesota in 1776, Carver mapped Red lake and the Red Lake river, giving them exactly their present names. Their earliest delineation, however, from personal examination, was by David Thompson, on a map drafted in 81113-14, from observations in April, 1798, when he was at Red lake and coming by way of the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers and thence going onward to Turtle and Cass lakes.

It tells us something of the appreciation of natural beauty by the Indians, that they took from the hues of sunset the name of the largest lake in Minnesota, whence we now have, by derivation,the names of the Red Lake river and the Red river of the North, the name of this county, and of the city which is its county seat.

A Modern Improvement.

Three doctors were operating on a man for appendicitis. After the operation was completed one of the doctors missed a small sponge. The patient was reopened, the sponge found within and the man sewed up again. Immediately the second doctor missed a needle. Again the patient was opened and closed. Then the third doctor missed a pair of scissors. "Gentlemen," said the victim, as they wereabout to open him again., "For Heaven's sake, if you are going to keep this up, put buttons on me."—Success.

A BAD STORM MONDAY NIGHT

Nearly All Grain Was Cut So Damage was Slight.

Tornado in Beltrami and Vicinity Caused Heavy Property Loss.

There was a heavy electrical and rain storm Monday night, but owing to the fact that practicaly all grain was in the shock, there is comparatively small damage to crops. For a time the clouds looked threatening and it was feared that there would be a heavy wind. No doubt many peope were prepared to jump into their cellars if the wind commenced to do stunts, but the worst storm went south.

Lightning put the electric lights out of commission and the city was in darkness most of the night. The house the on John P. Bagan farm just west of town was struck by lightning as was also the house on the Gerlach farm northwest of town. However, no one was injured and neither house was damaged very much.

A tornado struck the town of Beltrami and though no one was injured there was a heavy property loss. The heaviest loss was in the country near the village. Many farmers lost all of their buildings. In Beltrami buildings were moved from their foundations and all the store fronts were blown in. Small buildings were picked up and dashed to the ground in thousands of pieces. Three box cars from a siding were hurled by the wind into the coaches of Great Northern passenger train No. 6 which was standing on the main line. The train was practically wrecked and was not able to proceed for many hours. No passengers were injured. The storm was heavy around Erskine and McIntosh as well as Beltrami, but the loss on buildings was not heavy in those sections.

Grain in shock was soaked and scattered about the fields and no thrashing can be done for many days.

NEAR-INSURGENTS FROM MINNESOTA.

Voted Against Bill When Votes Were Not Needed to Pass it.

Were Good to the Stand-Patters Until the Eleveath Hour.

St. Paul, Minn., August 24, 1909.

In a letter written shortly after the final vote was taken on the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, I intimated that it would probably be found on inquiry that the votes cast against it by the near-insurgents, who comprise a majority of the delegation from Minnesota, was the result of an understanding with the party leaders that, as their votes were not needed to pass the bill they might take such action as would placate public sentiment in their several districts and make them solid with the voters at home who were assumed not to have made themselves familiar with the record they had already made. This inference is corroborated, as I anticipated it might be, by a telegram from Congressman Tawney to Eli Warner, who has busied himsef in getting up a demonstration in honor of the near-insurgents aforesaid. Mr. Tawney suggests inquiry as to whether the congressmen in question did not have an understanding with the president that they would vote for the bill in case their support was needed to insure its passage. Of course the congressmen implicated plead not guilty. That was to be expected. Inquiry as to votes cast by them before agitation against the new tariff became general, and they concluded to scuttle, may shed some light on their real attitude.

The Near-Insurgents.

It is not denied that all the Republican Congressmen from Minnesota with the exception of Davis and Lindberg voted for Cannon and the Cannon rules. The seating of this confirmed stand-patter in the speaker's chair and the vesting in him of practically unlimited power, so far as the house would have anything to do with the making of a tariff, settled as they well knew it would, what kind of a tariff it would be. But they went further than this. They voted for the Payne bill as it came from the house, and it is capable of almost mathematical demonstartion that if the tariff law, as modified as the result of presidential pressure is bad the Payne bill is infinitely worse.

The Bill They Did Vote For.

Take for instance the maximum clause. That in all conscience is bad enough. It provides that if on the first of March next the president shall find as the result of inquiries he is directed to make, that there is any discrimination in any foreign country against the United States and in favor of another country, he must issue proclamation directing a horizontal increase of twenty-five percents in the duties on all products from that country imported into the United States. But this provision

RUN OVER BY TRAIN

Frank Patnode Killed at Coleraine Where He Was Employed as Switchman.

Frank Patnode,son of Mr. and Mrs. Dolf Patnode, was killed at Coleraine Monday morning. Mr. Patnode was employed as a switchman on a road run in connection with the operation of the mines. With a companion he was standing on one of the tracks watching for the approach of a train on a parallel track, and did not notice the approach of a train from the opposite direction on the track on which he was standing. He was struck and knocked down and the train passed over his body and when picked up he was dead. His companion was thrown from the track, but was not seriously injured.

The remains were brought to this city Tuesday and funeral services were held from St. Joseph's church, of which deceased was a member, at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning, Rev. Fr. Fayolle officiating.

Mr. Patnode was twenty-seven years old. He was married about two and a half years ago, since which time he had lived at Coleraine and been employed as switchman. He is survived by his widow and one little son, besides his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dolf Patnode, and five brothers and two sisters. The brothers and sisters are, Moses, Will, Zeb, Edmund, Herman, Carrie and Nettie. It is indeed a sad affliction that has come to the bereaved elatives and has occasioned many expressions of sympathy from the many friends of the family.

Roller Bearing Wagons

This invention has been tested and tried and has at last reached perfection. We have a wagon that runs one-third lighter, yet is as strong and durable as any wagon made.

It goes without saying that a load can be moved with less draft on wheels than to slide along the highway and it must follow that a wheel will revolve easier in the same degree when on rollers than when required to slide with friction on the endless surface of the boxing of the hub.

Old Hickory Wagon–The Standard for quality and satisfactory service–we sell that too. Not so fine as the roller bearing, but the best of the other kind.

Record Is Reliable Barometer of Industrial Growth.—Receipts Fall a Trifle, but Loss Is Insignificant.

Minneapolis.—The Commercial Club has sent out reports for the month of July showing a great gain for Minneapolis in the volume of shipments over the same month in 1908. During last month 22,093 cars of merchandise were sent from this city, including all lines, as compared to 21,058 cars last year, a gain of 585 cars.

This is significant in showing the greater consumption of merchandise, and consequently increased production. Although the receipts this year show a falling off as compared with a year ago, being 17,983 cars as against 18,695 in July, 1908, this is not important, inasmuch as the volume of outcoming business is recognized as the most significant.

The following table shows the receipts and shipments on various commodities:

RABID DOGS SCARE CITY.

Stillwater Council Orders Muzzling of Canines.

Stillwater.—A special meeting of the council was held to order the muzzling of dogs for sixty days, and the regulations will be strictly enforced.

Mr. and Mrs. William Knospe and their daughter, Margaret, aged twenty years, living on North Sherburne street, have gone to the Pasteur institute at the state university to take a course of treatment. Last Monday the family reported to the police that their black dog acted as if rabid and the police shot it. Dr. C. A. Mack sent the head of the canine to the state board of health laboratory, where a test demonstrated that it was rabid.

MAN SHOOTS WIFE; KILLS SELF.

Married Widow With Five Children and Quarreled Over Brood.

Hibbing, Minn. — Joseph Josephson shot his wife twice in the face, inflicting dangerous and possibly fatal wounds and then turned the weapon on himself with fatal effect. Drink was at the bottom of the tragedy. Josephson a short time ago married a widow with five children. He was taken home intoxicated and the shooting occurred soon after. It is said that trouble between the man and his wife occurred several times on account of the children.

TOWN AND BROAD IN FIGHT.

Latter Enjoined by Cloquet Citizens From Finishing Station.

Cloquet.—Building work on the new union station is practically at a standstill as a result of an injunction served by the city upon the railroad companies to prevent them from making connections with the city sewer system until a fee of $100 has been paid for the privilege. The companies will pay $50 only and have threatened to board up the station.

OWATONNA HIT BY STORM.

Heavy Damages From Actions of the Elements.

Owatonna.—Further reports of damage done by storm continue to come in and the constant downpour of rain made conditions worse. From $8,000 to $10,000 damage was done to city culverts throughout Owatonna, while all the surrounding townships have like burdens.

The bridge over the river at Medford is a total wreck. No trains came over the Northwestern road, being held up by a wreck east of the city caused by washouts.

Blood run, a small creek, is a raging stream. Alleys and cellars are filled with water and many were compelled to don rubber boots in order to reach their business places.

Postmaster J. M. Diment and his wife, who are on a vacation at Diment's park, were marooned on an island formed by the high ground occupied by their bungalow. Mr. Diment finally reached town by climbing on a horse's back and finding his way out through the woods in the northern part of the park. The iron bridge on the Mineral springs road is out, also the bridge at the south end of Mineral Springs park.

South Cedar street is a solid river. East Rose street and Rice lake road are impassable. The residence of Rev. F. W. Klein was struck by lightning, tearing up the roof and causing considerable damage. The barns of W. R. Knickerbocker and Mrs. Kissner on the West Side were also struck and badly damaged.

The city council has been expecting to show great gain in the city's financial condition at the end of the year, but this has been knocked out by the damage from the storm.

RID WOMEN OF BUGABOO.

Sheriff Finds Stillwater's Educated Mystery—Sends Him to Asylum.

Stillwater.—Paul Michael, an educated man, who speaks five tongues, with staring eyes, long and shaggy hair and whiskers, has been living the life of a recluse near Cottage Grove for three months and frightening women and children of that neighborhood. He appeared at dwellings when men were away and talked incoherently. He was adjudged insane in the probate court in this city and will be taken to the Rochester hospital for the insane.

George Woodward and others complained of him to the sheriff. The sheriff found him on a bed of plucked grass under a railway culvert near Cottage Grove. He had a rare collection of odd trinkets, among them stones that he said were worth fabulous sums.

In an irrational way he told the probate court that he spent several months in the early spring in St. Paul. For three years he had been in Milwuakee and Sheboygan, Wis. He spent years in a German university studying chemistry and geology. Apparently he belonged to a good family, but he could not be induced to give details of his history or family.

ELKS ELECT OFFICERS.

J. G. Armson, of Stillwater, Leads the Antlered Herd.

St. Cloud.—The state convention of the Elks has closed.

The following officers were elected: J. G. Armson, Stillwater, president; R. B. Brower, St. Cloud, vice president; W. H. Rendall, Minneapolis, secretary; Samuel Donaldson, Faribault, treasurer; Rev. Parsall, Cass Lake, chaplain, and J. J. Nolan Brainerd, sergeant-at-arms. A committee to arrange for a large delegation to the national convention to be held next year was appointed as follows: W. W. Koons, St. Cloud; Emil Ferrant, Minneapolis; R. L. Aldrich, St. Paul; W. E. McCormick Duluth, and Judge Nethaway, Stillwater.

The choosing of the city for the next convention was left to the executive committee. Minneapolis, St. Paul, Faribault and Mankato are the cities in line for the convention. Minneapolis will probably be chosen.

OLSEN WILL REMAIN.

Resignation of Dean Will Be Refused by Regents.

St. Paul.—The resignation of J. W. Olsen as dean of the state school of agriculture, which he tendered to the regents a few days after he was elected last December, will come up for final action at the meeting of the regents this week, but members of the board say that it will not be accepted.

Mr. Olsen was elected by a divided vote in the board, and there was considerable criticism at the time. He then announced his resignation, but made it to take effect Aug. 1, so that the regents would have a few months to look for a successor and permit him to finish the school year.

Have No One Else.

But members of the board of regents state that no one has been looking around for a successor.

The criticism which was made of the selection at the time came to an end when Mr. Olsen announced his resignation, and by this time most of those who were finding fault then have forgotten the incident. No fault was found with him personally, but the criticism was that it was a political appointment, and that Olsen's training was general, and he was not a specialist in agricultural education.

TWO KILLED IN AUTO RACE

DRIVER AND MACHANICIAN MEET DEATH WHEN AUTO LEAVES TRACK.

TWO RECORDS BROKEN

Track Must Be Put In Better Condition or Great Speed Contests Will Be Called Off.

Indianapolis, Ind., Ang., 19.—Two lives were lost and two records broken during the inauguration of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway today. William A. Bourque, driver of a Knox car in the 250 mile race and Harry Holcomb, his mechanic were killed in the frenzied carnival of speed.

Barney Oldfield, driving his high powered Benz, covered a mile in forty three and one tenth seconds, breaking DePalma's mark of 51 seconds, and Louis Chevrolet in a Buick negotiated ten miles in the marvelous time of 8:56 4-10, cutting Oldfield's time of 9:12. Both of these are new American track marks.

Robert Burman in a Buick won the 250 mile race, feature of the day and contest that cost Bourque and Holcomb their lives. The winner's time was 4:38:57 4-10, slow because of many accidents that marred the race.

The Stoddard-Dayton (Clements) was second in 4:46:01 8-10 and National (Merz) finished third in 4:52:39 7-10. Another National with Kincaid at the wheel was the only other car of the ten starters to finish the long grind.

The death of the two men caused the American Automobile Association to issue an ultimatum to owners of the big track that certain changes must be made by tomorrow or the sanction for the event will be withdrawn. The American Automobile Association demands that the track be freed from many dangerous ruts which are said to be unavoidable in the new track and that every inch of it be thoroughly oiled and tarred. Today only a short portion in front of the grandstand was oiled and dust on other parts is blamed for the collapse of the two drivers in the long race, Louis Chevrolet and Fred Ellis, who were blinded by the dense white mist that covered the major portion of the track. Two records were broken and first day of the immense track proved fair to be an unqualified success when a pall was cast over the crowd of 12,000 speed-mad spectators by the sudden death of Bourque and Holcomb.

The Knox car was in second place with Burman in his Buick leading and had covered nearly 150 miles when the crash came. While coming down the home stretch, the car suddenly swerved and tore into the fence at the left of the track, turning completely over and pinning its two occupants beneath it. Both men were alive when taken from under the ill-fated machine but Borque died in the ambulance on the way to the hospital.

Holcomb lived a few minutes longer, but was dead soon after he arrived at hospital.

NOT ENOUGH SPACE IN AIR.

American Aerialist Lifts Aeroplane Over Frenchman's Airship.

Rheims, Aug. 19.—The American aviator Glenn H. Curtiss at sundown today added a dramatic feature to the trial flights of the aeroplanes entered for the contests of aviation week by skillfully guiding his machine above another aeroplane and avertin ga collision in the air that seemed imminent.

The feat was accomplished when, for the first time in history, many heavierthan-air craft were maneuvering at the same time. All were flying rapidly when suddenly Curtiss saw M. Dumanset in an Anternette monoplane approaching at right angles and on the same level with him. As quick as a flash, Curtiss realized the danger and elevating his planes, his machine instantly shot upward and soared safely over the Frenchman. Thousands of spectators who lined the aerodrome watched the maneuver with bated breath, but when they saw it successfully and brilliantly carried out, they applauded the American wildly. The third machine in the air at this time was that of M. Tissandier.

Experts tonight were agreed that Curtiss had made a fine demonstration of his skill and ability to control his machine. The altitude reached by him was one hundred and fifty feet, fifty feet higher tha nany of the other. Bleriot came out on the field with his monoplane but darkness prevented his making a flight. Curtiss tonight joined the other experts in a statement to the effect that aviation is fine weather sport but that the people must not expect the flights to be made in all sorts of weather.

MIMIC WAR OVER.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 19.—The war game, which has been conducted in Southeastern Massachusetts during the past week, ended today, but whether Boston, which was the objective point of the invading army under Brigadier General Tasker H. Bliss, was really captured theoretically or whether the Massachusetts troops commanded by General William A. Pew, succeeded in repulsing the attack of the Red and blocking the path to Boston is a matter which is still clouded in mystery.

WRIGHT BROS. BRING SUIT.

New York, Aug. 19.—Wilbur Wright and Orville Wright, the aeronauts, today entered a suit in United States circuit court here against the Aeronautic Society of this city, charging infringement of patent rights on their aeroplane inventions.

The Wrights complain that the society procured from the Herring-Curtiss company and from the Glenn H. Curtiss company flying machines alleged to infringe upon Wrights' patents and secured Curtiss to give a public exhibition for which an admission fee was charged.

The KITCHEN CABINET

SIDNEY SMITH'S SALAD DRESSING

TWO large potatoes, passed through kitchen sieve,
Unwonted softness to the salad give.
Of mordant mustard add a single spoon,
(Distrust the condiment which bites too soon).

But deem it not, though made of herbs, a fault,
To add a double quantity of salt.
Three times the spoon with oil of Lucca crown,
And once with vinegar procured from town.

True flavor needs it, and your poet begs,
The pounded yellow of two well-boiled eggs.
Let onion atoms lurk within the bowl,
And, half suspected, animate the whole.

And lastly, on the favored compound toss,
A magic teaspoon of anchovy sauce.
Then, though green turtle fail, though venison is tough,
Though ham and turkey are not boiled enough,
Serenely full the epicure shall say:
"Fate cannot harm me—I have dined to-day."

English News.

The officials of one workhouse have recently substituted suet puddings for meat. This may cause such a change as to rob England of her old claim to being the loafer's paradise.

At a recent congress of food chemists the "colloidal" was frequently used. This applies to the heady quality of the beer.

As one English paper says, the consumer, too, becomes "colloidal" after drinking it.

Manchester has a newly established School for Mothers, and their first rule is to make "the evenings as bright as possible for father." That looks as if the suffragettes had succeeded in turning the tables!

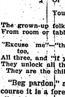
Marshmallow Icing.

Boil together a cup sugar and one-third cup water. Pour this over the stiffly-beaten whites of two eggs, stirring all the while. Then to this add one scant cup of finely chopped marshmallows. It will melt gradually, when it may be poured over the cake.

Banana Croquette.

A Summer Salad.—For a party of six take six perfect bananas, peel, dip each banana in mayonnaise dressing, then roll each one in nuts which have been ground very fine. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves.

THE CHILDREN'S KEYS.



HEARTS, like doors, open with ease
To very, very little keys;
And don't forget that they are these:
"I thank you, sir" and "If you please."

And don't forget "Beg pardon," too
If any naughty thing you do.
Or, if you like best, "pardon me,"
'Tis just as well, we all agree.

Or if "Excuse me" you but say,
You are quite sure to have your way.
The grown-up folks will not refuse you;
From room or table will excuse you.

"Excuse me"—"thanks"—"beg pardon," too,
All three, and "if you please,"
They unlock all the doors of hearts;
They are the children's "keys."

"Beg pardon," and "excuse me"—Of course it is a foregone conclusion that all right-minded parents teach their children, early, to say both.

But do they teach them the distinction? Tell them that when they step on your toe, or pass between you and your guest, they must say "beg pardon," or "pardon me." On the other hand, when they want to leave the table or be allowed to leave the room, "excuse me" is the correct form of apology.

In short, "beg pardon" is the phrase for any breach of manners, any slip of decorum. But they should say: "Excuse me," when wishing to leave your presence. This may seem straining a point of etiquette, but it is so easy to teach these distinctions to young minds; let us not wait until the incorrect expression is a fixed habit.

Child Labor Laws.

In one of the recent sociological publications is the significant picture of a boy, with a sweet, smiling, but drawn and pinched face; an undersized head in a shabby cap; a ragged jacket covering thin, sloping shoulders—he appeared to be about ten years old, even less; by no stretch of the cruelest imagination could he have been 12. But his parents have put him to work in a glass factory in Pennsylvania. They exempted themselves from prosecution under the "Child Labor Law," on the sworn affidavit that he was 14.

Prune Roll a la Laura.

Into a rich pastry roll mashed and sweetened prunes. Bake about 20 minutes. Serve hot with a sauce made of the juice of the prunes slightly thickened with flour, and flavored with lemon or vanilla. With whipped cream piled on top this is a fancy, and delicious dessert.

A Home Cupboard.

For the season when ice is difficult to get, or for homes where it is considered too expensive to keep at all, a handy out-door cupboard can be made this way. Outside the kitchen window made a frame of boards a foot wide; put in smaller boards for shelves, then cover the whole outside with wire netting. The window serves as the door.

SUTTON CASE NOW CLOSED

COURT OF INQUIRY FINDS THE DEAD LIEUTENANT RESPONSIBLE FOR OWN DEMISE.

MAY APPEAL TO CONGRESS

No Proceedings Will Be Taken Against Those in Service Whose Conduct Was Criticised by the Court.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 18.—With publication today of acting secretary of the navy Winthrop's approval of the findings of the court of inquiry that Lieutenant James N. Sutton jr., of the United States Marine Corps, was "directly and solely responsible for his own death at Annapolis nearly two years ago," the famous Sutton case became a closed incident as far as the navy department is concerned. Counsel for Sutton intimated, however, that they probably would take the issues involved to Congress with a view of having a full hearing of the case by a committee. Mrs. Sutton declined to discuss the result of the inquiry.

Too much time has elapsed since the incident, in the opinion of the navy officials, to undertake any proceedings against persons whose conduct in the case has been made the subject of criticism by the court. They, however, will be made acquainted in an official but informal way of these criticisms which will both serve the purpose of admonition to them and of presenting to them the view taken by the department of their conduct.

Although Mr. Winthrop in his endorsement speaks of a lax state of discipline existing at the Marine School prior to and at the time of Sutton's death, he says that conditions have been improved, that splendid discipline prevails at this time and that he is confident that the unfortunate situation previously exeisting will not again prevail.

TAFT NOT WORRIED

Attack on New Tax Law Will Not Worry Him.

Beverly, Mass., Aug. 18.—Reports which are reaching Beverly daily from Washington and New York that the constitutionality of the new corporation tax is to be tested just as soon as an effort is made to collect it, have not disturbed the president in the least, as he laughingly told a number of calers today.

The tests and the protests, the president declared were all anticipated and no threats of corporation lawyers now cause thec hief executive any alarm. Mr. Taft, who is himself the father of the corporation tax idea, is thoroughly convinced thatthe tax wil stand any test. Attorney General Wickersham and Senator Root who collaborated on the corporation tax provision of tariff bill believed that the measure as enacted, will surivve any attempt to nullify it.

Attorney General Wickersham is coming to see the president Friday concerning some pardon cases and also to go over a few of the preliminaries in the plan for reorganization of the duties of interstate commerce commission, amendment of the Sherman anti-trust law and the bringing of the interstate corporations more definitely under conrtol of one branch of the government. Wickersham has given much study to these subjects which will be the principal recommendations in the president's message to congress next December.

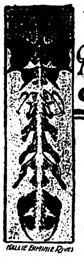
AUTOGRAPH GHOSTS OF FAMOUS PEOPLE



HALLIE ERMINIE RIVES

THE autograph fiend has a far more amusing fad just now than the mere collecting of ordinary signatures of extraordinary folk, and the newest thing in this hobby necessitates the possession of a "ghost-book" to hold the signatures which portray the "ghosts" of the eminent ones.

These little books are becoming very popular both in London and in New York. They have an advantage over the ordinary autograph album, because the collecting of signatures has been so overdone that many of the "great ones" have had rubber facsimiles made of their very best autographs—not the kind that appears on their checks—and instead of taking time to respond, whenever a stamped and addressed envelope is inclosed, all they do is to pass the letter, request and envelope over to their secretary—or perhaps it never gets beyond the secretary at all—and the autograph is stamped on in such a manner that it serves the purpose well and saves Mr. Author, Mr. Actor or Mr. Singer a lot of time and trouble.

But a request for a name in one's ghost book has a certain novelty about it and there is, too, considerable curiosity to see just what sort of a ghost one's name will make, so that nearly everyone will take the trouble to picture his ghost for you.

In making the collection for a ghost book, partially reproduced here, many well-known men and women were asked for ghosts. President and Mrs. Taft were immensely amused at the idea and both took the keenest interest in seeing how their ghosts would turn out. The big statesman adjusted his glasses, folded with the utmost precision the paper on which he was to inscribe his ghost, looked around for a stub pen, which, unfortunately, he could not find on his desk in the Hot Springs bungalow and then he wrote his name and hastily folded back the paper.

"Cannot say that for such a big man as I am in the flesh my ghost cuts such a wide swath," he laughingly remarked as he held the paper up for Mrs. Taft to view. "But anyhow, the smaller one's ghost the better—perhaps," he added.

"Mrs. Taft was more pleased with her ghost than she was with that of her husband. "You are more important just now, but my ghost is a far more artistic creature than yours and really more spirituelle," she laughed.

It will be noticed that a part of Mrs. Taft's ghost bears a remarkable resemblance to a Masonic emblem.

Miss Mary Garden practiced several times on her ghost before she would allow the final one to appear in the writer's ghost book.

"Ghosts, like everything else, improve by practice, and I look upon my final ghost as a worthy effort," laughed Miss Garden. "In fact, I see the urn above from which my spook must have hopped out," she said, and sure enough, if one will look at the prima donna's ghost it will be found quite true.

Miss Geraldine Farrar was enchanted with her ghost, which she said looked like a veritable butterfly. "How splendid to be so picturesque a ghost!" Miss Farrar commented.

Miss Emma C. Thursby has one of the most remarkable ghosts of all, and for beauty and symmetry it is quite as pleasing as a wrought-iron work design or a Japanese brass candlestick. "I prefer to think of it as something that was designed by the shades of some Japanese artist, which idea I absorbed when I visited some of the great temples in Japan," said Miss Thursby.

Lady Warwick says she doesn't believe in ghosts at all, but she was very much impressed by the appearance of her titled name when her ghost became a reality. "I think I shall design a book plate out of it. That wouldn't be a bad idea, would it?" the countess added as she viewed the strong, bold writing that formed her signature.

Lady Cosmo Duff-Gordon was enchanted with her ghost and ghost-collecting has become such a fad with her that she has purchased a dozen of the little volumes for her friends. "I put my ghost in each one and I suppose I must be a woman of a number of selves or else there are a number of warring ghosts in my ancestry, for each one of my signatures produced a ghost so totally different from the others that one would scarcely believe that they came from the same name and handwriting. But I am rather pleased with the idea, for what is more prosaic than lack of variety? I have made my fortune by original and diverse designs in the making of frocks," said the titled dressmaker, "so why shouldn't my ghost signatures portray that characteristic?"

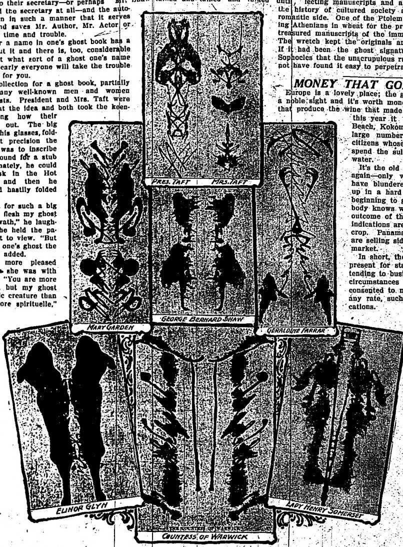
When Mrs. Elinor Glyn, author of "Three Weeks," had made her ghost she thought that it bore some resemblance to a tiger and eagerly pointed out its claws. "The tiger is essentially one of my transmigrations, or shall I say manifestations?" remarked Mrs. Glyn. "Hence my tiger ghost. Paul would be pleased with that, wouldn't he?" she added with a smile.

Emmy Destinn, the gifted Bohemian prima donna of the Royal opera house, Berlin, who has just finished a brilliant first season in America, said that she could see in her ghost the shades of the late empress dowager of china. That fancy may have occurred to her because when she made her ghost the news of the death of the Chinese empress had just been received.

George Bernard Shaw hasn't time for ghosts or interviews or writer folk at all, he says, yet this most inconsistent of men generally gives his interview and sees the writer person, and here we have his ghost. Mr. Shaw generally makes it as uncomfortable as possible for the interviewer before allowing him to be admitted, but after that the genial blue-eyed Irishman is irresistible and one readily forgives him anything that has seemed rude. The writer sent a note asking for an interview with Mr. Shaw in his chambers just off the Embankment in London last summer and in response Mr. Shaw characteristically wrote:

My Dear Miss ——: I will have ten minutes rest to-morrow some time between 11 and 12:30. If you catch me during the ten minutes I will see you. If you stay longer I will throw you out of the window. GEORGE B. S.

The writer went at a quarter to twelve and Mr. Shaw talked and talked and talked until nearly one o'clock and not a word was said about the window or the playwright's strong right arm!



For a man of his brusque threats Mr. Shaw has a very mild and diminutive-looking ghost.

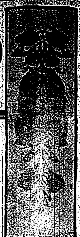
Hallie Erminie Rives has a ghost that might be of Oriental origin, for it resembles an antique and elaborately carved vase of Chinese design more than anything else. "Perhaps it is meant for the urn that contains my shades," the novelist laughingly remarked.

Of course one may just care to have the ghosts of one's friends and not particularly those of people celebrated in the art, literary or political worlds, and then it will be a simple matter to fill up one's ghost book, for the making of ghosts will be found to be quite a novelty at a tea or other social affair, and taken along with one's hand luggage on an ocean voyage a ghost-book will prove a source of endless amusement, while it will make a lasting souvenir of the trip. The ghost book itself is a small affair that can be gotten in the pocket of an overcoat or can be carried easily in a muff or big hand-bag, so that one can always take it along without any trouble.

When you ask for a ghost signature you prepare the page for the writing by folding it and the person whose ghost you are after writes directly on the line of the fold. A stub pen which holds a large amount of ink is best for this purpose, as the size and mystery of the ghost depend largely upon the ink. After the name is written the page is folded together again without blotting and lo, the ghost appears. Try it and see!

It is not necessary to have a book. One can have the signatures written on separate sheets of paper and collect them, but care must be taken to use soft paper that will absorb the ink readily. These separate sheets can then be pasted into a scrap-book, but the little ghost book itself will be found more convenient. At the top of a page in the ghost book is a small dotted line for the date and below appears another line for the writing of the name after the ghost is made, so that after all in a ghost book one gets a genuine autograph as well as the spook signature.

While several ghost signatures of the same person will often show an apparent wide difference in conformation, owing to the shape of the pen, the flow of the ink and the amount of pressure used, a more careful scrutiny will make it clear that the chief characteristics hold throughout. The ghost is true to its type.



LADY DUFF-GORDON

Who, then, will interpret and reveal the true meaning of our ghost autographs? Here is a new field for investigation and amusement.

With the advent of the ghost book we have a new twist to an old, old fad. Travelers in central Europe as early as the fourteenth century used to carry their "Book of Friends," an octavo volume in which names and sentiments were inscribed. On their return home they could show an interesting record of the famous personages they had met. These are the first autograph albums of which we hear, but the passion for collecting manuscripts and autographs is as old as the history of cultured society and is not without its romantic side. One of the Ptolemies once paid the starving Athenians in wheat for the privilege of copying some treasured manuscripts of the immortal Greek dramatists. The wretch kept the originals and returned the copies. If it had been the ghost signatures of Euripides and Sophocles that the unscrupulous ruler was after he would not have found it easy to perpetrate so heartless a trick.

MONEY THAT GOES ABROAD

Europe is a lovely place; the grave of Shakespeare is a noble sight and it's worth money to see the hillsides that produce the wine that made the Rhine famous. But this year it was Broadway, Bath Beach, Kokomo or Kalamazoo for a large number of worthy American citizens whose custom it has been to spend the sultry months across the water.

It's the old story of Balaklava over again—only worse. Some millions have blundered. Times are twisted up in a hard knot and we are just beginning to get the kinks out. Nobody knows what is going to be the outcome of the new tariff law. The indications are good for a poor wheat crop. Panama hats and overcoats are selling side by side in the open market.

In short, there is no time like the present for staying at home and attending to business. In these crucial circumstances 200,000 persons have consented to make the sacrifice. At any rate, such are the present indications.

This means something to the rest of the country. Paying to see Europe is our annual blood-letting operation. Millions upon millions are taken out of our national circulation. We work hard during the winter, either at earning money or at getting it from those who have earned it, then hustle across the water to fatten up the Swiss guides and the hotel keepers. That is, about 1,200,000 of us do. The other 78,800,000 do their traveling in their sleep, so they can be back next morning in time for work.

The rich American going abroad counts only one on the passenger list, but he must be carefully considered in any estimate.

He spreads out the chart upon his desk. An exceedingly anxious-to-please agent of the steamship company is at his side. Here is something up near the bow that is just right—so the steamship man says. "Not for a minute," says the man who has the last say. It is too far up in front. The motion of the boat would put him out of business the first day. What else?

Oh, an exquisite suite amidships. It's great. The Countess de Spitzbergen never takes anything else when she is going to or coming from America. Beautiful parlor, mahogany finish. Bedroom in ivory. Bathroom in baby blue. Maid's quarters. And the rate for two adults and one servant is only $1,700.

Will the gentleman take it?

Indeed he will not. The Countess of Spitzbergen may travel in the hold if she likes, but no baby blue or mahogany can lure him to a point over the engines. Why, didn't he come over once in a suite thus located? Didn't the incessant coughing, wheezing, trembling and sneezing of the machinery nearly drive him wild? Not a wink of sleep from the time he went abroad until he got home. Friends thought he had been sick when he showed himself in the street.

Oh, very well. Here's an equally beautiful suite far removed from the engines—back toward the stern. Occupants of these apartments often call for the captain to ask what makes the boat go, because they can hear no noise nor feel any vibration. Highly recommended by the best physicians to nervous patients. Price, the same.

Did any one ever hear of such stupidity? Here our patient multi-millionaire has explained in detail that he cannot travel at the bow of a ship because the motion is too great and the agent has shown him a suite near the stern. What's the difference between the bow and the stern, anyway? Isn't each end balanced in the middle where it will go up and down like the end of a walking-beam? Well, a steamship man who doesn't know any more than that can go back home. Mr. Multi-Millionaire will travel by some line that at least employs persons of intelligence.

HIS TERM OF OFFICE LONG

Except Bismarck, Prince Von Bulow Holds Record for Services as German Chancellor.

Prince Bulow, former chancellor of the German empire, left office after having been the longest lived of German chancellors after the first and greatest. Bismarck was continuously in office, under different names, from 1862 to 1890, a period of 28 years. His immediate successor, Caprivi, lasted only four years—from 1890 to 1894, while "Uncle Chlodvig" Hohenlohe ran the imperial affairs after that till 1900, when he was succeeded by Bulow, who had come from Rome to the foreign office in 1897, so that he had already had a spell of 13 years' hard work in the Wilhelmstrasse.

For his services in connection with the Spanish agreement ab[illegible]oline and other Pacific islands, he was made a count; while in 1905, on the occasion of the crown prince's wedding, the kaiser raised him to the rank of prince, or, rather, "furst," which is akin to that of the British marquis and only inferior to that of duke, seeing that the present emper[illegible] Bismarck, offered [illegible] the title of her[illegible] Lauenburg, which he [illegible] prince was Bulow's [illegible] policy. Both Bismarck's and Bulow's elevation to the dignity of prince was the recompense of their victories over the French. But Bulow has never clung to office with the desperation of Bismarck and left the Wilhelmstrasse without a sigh.

The Candy Boy and His Little Love

BY HARRIET BOYER

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

If my mother loved you, she plunged into a letter anywhere—and out of it anywhere.

In a large old, black-leather pocket-book I found a letter written to my father the night before they were betrothed. It had neither formal beginning nor ending, but ran simply thus:

Don't be silly about the candy business, Dickie, even if my father did rub it in rather. He won't do it again, because—I'll come to that presently.

And if it will make you feel any better, I will tell you a little secret. If it weren't for that candy business my heart would not be so unspeakably and unalterably yours. And this is the way of it: When I was a tiny girl and lived on Bleecker street, and you were a small boy and sold candy by the ounce, over the counter in your father's old corner shop so near at hand, I used to come to you to buy sweets. And you would say, with the most beautiful brogue:

"Wud ye be havin' the wintergreen shticks, miss, or the pippermint, or a thrifle of both?" Oh, yes you would. I always took a "thrifle of both." And while you were weighing it, and putting it into nice white paper, ad tying it up, I was just doting on you—your tight little blond curls, your brave blue eyes, your straight nose, your pink cheeks, your strong white teeth. And you had funny nicks on your hands, as if you had been playing with the cat or somebody had been driving tacks into you. I reproduced those nicks on my own hands, painfully, with large pins, until held up by mother, who blamed our dear, innocent Tom. Then Mercy and Truth met together, and I was obliged to confess. When asked why I desired to hurt and disfigure my poor little paws, which were being tenderly anointed with soothing unguents, I answered that I thought the nicks were pretty. My mother did not argue it out with me. She made me wear gloves until my hands were healed. I did not like gloves, and soon after that we moved away. How did you get those nicks, Dickie? I see they are clean gone for ever, and at first I quite missed them. When my brother talked, rapturously, of his chum at Harvard who was to enter law at the same time as himself, I did not know that the Richard Folliott, of Stuyvesant square, whose father was the rich manufacturer of Irish linens, with works at Belfast and warehouses in New York—I did not know that this Richard Folliott was my small candy boy. That is, not until you entered the parlor that Sunday, and I recognized the tight little blond curls, and the soft little brogue into which you tumble whenever you are slightly embarrassed. Oh, yes, you do. And then, Dickie, dearest, I knew that I had loved you for years and years, and you had never known it. For the matter of that, neither had I.

And it was brave and beautiful in you to tell my father all about the candy business, though, if you hadn't, good-by to me.

When my father took his dear little daughter in his arms, and told her she mustn't cry for the moon, meaning you, for she couldn't have it, I took his advice. I didn't cry. I pondered. I wanted to find out wherein our family greatness consisted. So I went to a dear old professor I know, and I asked him to lend me books which should throw light on the Dutch colonists from the time they first landed on the island of Manhattan. I was gratified. Then I went to my father's library, and I sat on his knees, and rumpled his hair, and I said to him:

"Father, why can't I marry Dickie Folliott?" He answered patiently:

"Because, my dear, it would not be proper that the daughter of a man who has been minister to the court of St. Vladimir and one, too, having such a pedigree as ours, should marry a youth who once sold candy over the counter."

"Is it generally known that Dickie sold candy over the counter?" quoth I.

"Perhaps not generally. It must be known in certain quarters, because everything is known by somebody. These things always leak out. I confess I shouldn't have been aware of the fact myself if the young man hadn't told me; and I honor his frankness, I may say his courage. But that is no reason why I should allow him to marry my daughter."

"How is it that Mr. Folliott's father is so rich now?" I asked. I thought I might as well find out all I could about you, Dickie, dear.

"It seems," said my father, seriously, "that the elder Mr. Folliott was an Irish lad from Derry, a regular gossoon. When he came to this country he met a poor Frenchman of Huguenot descent, who had been a confectioner's assistant in his native land. The two put their wits together and the few dollars they had and started a little corner candy store, a mere cabin of a place, not very far from where we used to live on Bleecker street. I have bought broken candy for your mother and you there many a time. That was their specialty. Well, those men kept at it for years, until each had made quite a respectable fortune. Then the Frenchman went back to Paris, and the Irishman to Derry. Mr. Folliott subsequently bought out some linen mills in Belfast and returned to this country to settle. He has a large family. Richard is the youngest, I think. He has been very prosperous, lives in good style, is elder in one of the Presbyterian churches. There is another thing. You would never be happy with a Presbyterian. They are too set in their ways. No, Nellie, give him up, child. Between candy and Calvinism you would have a sweet time."

"Is candy so very much worse than rum?" I asked innocently.

"Rum!" said my father. "Rum! What's rum got to do with it?"

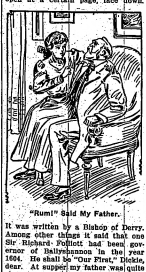
"Well, you see," I answered, "I'm very fond of Dicky Folliott and I don't want to give him up, so I thought I would find out wherein our greatness consisted and just why our family is so much better than his. And it seems that our ancestor—'Our First,' as we call him—made a large fortune by trading rum to the Indians for pelts. I thought he was a Dutch patroon on the Hudson, and held a grant of land from the government."

"So he was," said my father angrily. "So he had. What infernal nonsense have you got into your head now?"

I handed him a book with the page open, on which there was some unpleasant reading for a man with a foible. It was there set forth that "Our First" had accumulated an enormous fortune in the manner indicated. That he had bought an estate and slaves on the Hudson from an extravagant and impecunious patroon; had set himself up on an equality with his neighbors, and had his pretensions flouted unto the third generation; after which they were recognized as perfectly legitimate. My father read slowly, examined the book all over, sat quiet for a moment, and then said, in a hurt and displeased way:

"Well, Eleanor, I see you are determined to marry this man in spite of all your mother and I can say. You may tell that young scamp of a Folliott to come around to dinner to-morrow. And I wish him well of his bargain! For if he ever has his way again about pepper and salt I'm mistaken. He'll be delivered over into your hands, horse, foot, and artillery."

Then my father took me by the shoulders, shook me with great tenderness, kissed me, and turned me out of the room. I had a bonne bouche for him, however. I knew where your family came from, and I thought while I was about it I would find out something about it. I laid a book on my father's desk called "Derryana," open at a certain page, face down.



"Rum!" Said My Father.

It was written by a Bishop of Derry. Among other things it said that one Sir Richard Folliott had been governor of Ballyshannon in the year 1604. He shall be "Our First," Dickie, dear. At supper my father was quite cheerful. We talked about birds. I am teaching my parrot to say, "Candy and Calvinism."

Now, there are still other things to be done. You must come to church to-morrow and sit in our pew. And you must bend your stiff knees and thank Heaven devoutly that your father was wise enough to sell candy, and our ancestor was foolish enough to trade rum. For it he hadn't, where would you and I be? Not sitting alongside of each other in church, if you please. At least, not yet. And there is still something else. Take the Prayer Book I gave you, get your date right, the day of the montm, and learn the Lessons and the Collect for to-morrow, the Psalms and the Litany. If you go wrong I will prompt you. Bow when I do. Kneel when I do, and be quick about it. And if you get dreadfully mixed up, mumble intelligently. My father will think you are at the end of the law. Finally Dickie, you must go to him after dinner and tell him you intend to become a good churchman. Oh, yes, you must. When we are married, I shall have to promise to obey you, which I don't mean to do—not one little bit. And in your heart you will always be a black, bitter, blue, yellow Calvinist. You can have a pew in your own church, and once every Sunday I shall clothe myself in furs from head to foot, and go with you to your "Greenland's Icy Mountains service." But you must join our communion. My father belonged to the Dutch persuasion and my mother coaxed him into the church, just as I am coaxing you. And now he is always giving her points on rubrics and ecclesiastical law, just as you will be doing with me before we have been married a year.

Oh, Dickie, dearest, what a volume I have written you! But I am so happy I couldn't wait. I had to pour it all out at once. And Caesar will take this round, and deliver it into your own hands, late as it is.

You broth of a boy! Good-night!

"Well," said Farmer Corntossel, "I've got to look after my tomatoes and string beans and things."

The Artless Boy.

The boy bowed politely to the grocer.

"I understand," he said, "that you want a boy, sir. Will you kindly look me over."

"I only pay $3," said the grocer, abruptly.

"I understood," said the boy, "that you paid four."

The grocer nodded.

"I did pay four," he said, "until I saw in the paper the other day that Millionaire Rogers began his business career on $3 a week."

The boy smiled.

"But I don't expect to be a millionaire," he said. "I don't care to be rich—I'd much rather be good."

The grocer was so much pleased with this artless reply that he compromised with the boy for three and a half.

BAD DREAMS
Caused by Coffee.

"I have been a coffee drinker, more or less, ever since I can remember, until a few months ago I became more and more nervous and irritable, and finally I could not sleep at night for I was horribly disturbed by dreams of all sorts and a species of distressing nightmare.

"Finally, after hearing the experience of numbers of friends who had quit coffee and were drinking Postum, and learning of the great benefits they had derived, I concluded coffee must be the cause of my trouble, so I got some Postum and had it made strictly according to directions.

"I was astonished at the flavour and taste. It entirely took the place of coffee, and to my very great satisfaction, I began to sleep peacefully and sweetly. My nerves improved, and I wish I could wean every man, woman and child from the unwholesome drug—ordinary coffee.

"People really do not appreciate or realize what a powerful drug it is and what terrible effect it has on the human system. If they did, hardly a pound of it would be sold. I would never think of going back to coffee again. I would almost as soon think of putting my hand in a fire after I had once been burned.

"A young lady friend of ours had stomach trouble for a long time, and could not get well as long as she used coffee. She finally quit coffee and began the use of Postum and is now perfectly well. Yours for health."

On the theory that "no man can woship God and Mammon" no congressman can vote for Cannon and against the Alrich bill and get away with it.

According to recent reports there is still some distance between the Hon. James T. McCleary and the government pay roll.

Apropos of the "jokes" of the tariff bill, the St. Cloud Times thinks that one of the largest is the signature of William H. Taft.

In some of the departments at Washington the clerks are required to make out reports as to how much work they do every day. This is probably their most arduous duty.

Bob Dunn intimates that he may or may not be a candidate for governor. Bob has a lot of loyal friends in Minnesota and whether or not he gets into the race he will have something to say about the platform, and probably will be a determining factor in the nominees of the convention.

A New York newspaper argues that the automobile craze will bring about a panic. While this pessimistic view will not be generally indorsed there is no doubt but that many people who can't afford them are buying automobiles. It is said by competent authority that at least two thousand homes in St. Paul and Minneapolis have been mortgaged for the purpose of obtaining money to buy machines. In a year or two the automobile will be ready for the junk shop, but a mortgage is a healthy animal and manages to stick around and grow fat. The mortgage has not any tires to burst and very seldom gets hurt in a collision. As a business proposition it is better to own the mortgage than the automobile.

Minnesota has thrice been honored by the election of distinguished veterans as commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, and each time Minneapolis has been the home of the recipient of this honor. Twenty years ago Judge John P. Rea was elected, ten years later the mantle fell on Eli Torrance and at the encampment at Salt Lake City last week former Governor Van Sant was chosen to this position, by almost an unanimous vote.

A SERIOUS SITUATION.

Many of the republican leaders regret that President Taft is to come to Minnesota just at this time when chaos prevails in the ranks of the party. The shrewd political leaders argue that the president's visit will have a prejudicial effect on the campaign next year. The party organization is already badly demoralized, with this new split on the tariff question, but there was some possibility of the factions getting together on state issues provided a clean and acceptable candidate for governor could be named next year without a pre-convention row. But now comes the trouble between the congressional delegation and the federal machine, and Taft's championship of Congressman Tawney will make the breach wider and bring the tension near the breaking point.

If President Taft would stay away, some of the sores might be healed by the salve of time. The next election is fourteen months away, and with good crops and fair prices for agricultrual and dairy products the people might be induced to forget, or at least condone, some of the infamous features of the Aldrich bill. The voters would in some measure forget their indignation, and beyond wreaking vengeance on Tawney, there might be no unhappy results of the present situation. But the president's visit will shatter the hopes of even the most optimistic republican leader. Taft's defense of Tawney will be a direct slap at Senators Nelson and Clapp and the seven republican congressmen who voted against the Aldrich bill. The president by virtue of his office and as the accredited leader of his party, necessarily wields a great power and the republican who believes in the heresy of the party's regularity, as well as the unthinking element who hear only the wail from higher up will unquestionably revolt against the program of the insurgents.

There is a merry war in prospect and with the republican party divided in three or four camps, even the normal eighty thousand majority will not be sufficient to bring a victory. A campaign of crimination and recrimination, of apology and explanations in palliations, means that for a few years at less a continuation of republican ascendency is seriously endangered.

IT'S UP TO HALVOR.

The republican insurgent congressmen from Minnesota disagree as to just what constitutes loyalty to the tariff reform cause. For instance Congressman Davis of the Third district does not think much of of the "insurgency of Stevens, Nye, Volstead, Miller, and Steenerson. He classifies them as eleventh-hour insurgents, induced at the last minute to vote against the Aldrich bill because a failure to do so meant trouble at home. This vacillating five voted for Cannon and the old rules, and up to the time of the final passage of the bill supported Cannon and Payne.

Mr. Tawney makes even a stronger case against Steenerson, et. al. He says they even promised the president that they would vote for the bill if their votes wear necessary to insure its passage.

Either the alleged insurgents have been playing fast and loose with the interests of the people or their colleagues are basely slandering them. The people of the Ninth district, who are vitally interested in tariff reform, would be tremendously obliged if Hon. Halvor Steenersn would give us a full explanation of his part in the bit of political legerdemain,

In the meantime let the reader hear what Congressman Davis says of his fellow congressmen;

"I wonder whom Tawney is refering to in his telegram suggesting that some of the members had promised to vote for the bill? He cannot refer to Lindbergh and myself, for we voted against Cannn and the Cannon Aldrich schedules at every turn. The other members voted with Cannon all the time until the last roll call and no one knew until the last couple of hours or a day before that he would vote against the bill. But Tawney has nothing to say. He voted with Cannon all the time."

A LION HUNT.

Usually a Case in Which Hunters Goad the Game Into Combat.

There is a distinction in Africa between ordinary lions and "man eaters," says T. R. MacMechen in McClure's Magazine. The ordinary lion does not willfully attack man. The presence of lions roaming at night on the veldt is not disturbing to any native nor to whites who have come to understand the beast. Persons returning to their camps after nightfall do not notice the roaring of lions or the cries of leopards or hyenas.

It is seldom that people bent upon domestic errands carry weapons in the darkness, although at night the veldt of British East Africa is alive with roaming beasts, which may be heard from the verandas of the houses. Lions give the passing man a wide berth, day or night, when it is apparent that he means no mischief. An ordinary lion, even when wounded, will try flight before fight. When its escape is disputed it will, especially if wounded, try to maul its enemy with teeth and claws.

A lion hunt is usually a chase in which the hunters goad the game into combat. Once a lion has tasted human blood, however, it is no more afraid of man, but learns that he is the weakest of animals and the choicest of meat. Such a lion is known as a man eater because now he hunts man.

NEAR-INSURGENTS FROM MINNESOTA.

at least gives foreign countries wishing to trade with the United States opportunity to remove any discriminations agains the country which now exist. Under the Payne bill the maximum clause went into effect at once. It was automatic. No proclamation by the president was necessary. The collectors of the customs at the several ports were to be made the judges of whether a foreign nation was discriminating against the United States or not. If they found that it was they were authorized at once to clap on twenty-five per cent on all goods coming from that country in addition to exorbitant duties provided for in Mr. Payne's bill. This Payne provision every one of the near-insurgents from Minnesota voted for.

The Duties Near Insurgents Favored.

Under the Payne bill hides were taxed. The Minnesota near-insurgents voted for that. Under that bill exorbitant duties much higher than provided for in the bill as it came from the conference committee, were levied on gloves and hosiery. The Minnesota near-insurgnts voted for these higher duties. Under the Payne bill a heavy tax was levied on boots and shoes reduced in the bill as it finally passed. The near-insurgents voted for this heavy tax on boots and shoes. They voted for a heavier tax on lumber than was finally provided for in the law. And so one might go on, item by item, to show that, if in order to court favor at home, the near-insurgents from Minnesota, at the eleventh hour, when their votes didn't matter one way or the other, had their names put on record against the bill as finally perfected in conference, the records show that when their opposition would have meant something and might conceivably have resulted in the Republican party carrying out its pledges to the people, that the Minnesota near nsurgents stood like a stone wall for Cannon and the kind of tariff Cannon and the stand-patters were ready to impose on the tax-ridden consumers of the nation.

As to Clapp.

I have heretofore said that Eli Warner of St. Paul has assumed the role of reformer, which to those familiar with his record was to say the least unexpected and that he has taken a leading part in getting up this whitewashing demonstration publicly proposed in the first place, I believe, by the St. Paul Dispatch but the impetus for which I think extraneous evidence indicates comes from a less disinterested quarter. For when Eli sits in the game there is generally something doing. In this instance, and it accounts for quite a number of things, the clue is furnished by the fact that Mr. Warner's son is Senator Clapp's private secretary. One at once sees the connection. Senator Clapp is to be included in the non-partisan demonstration and Senator Clapp looks to the next Minnesota legislature to re-elect him to the United States Senate. No wonder Eli got busy.

Roosevelt Policies Discredited.

No observer of current events can have failed to notice that no sooner had Mr. Taft assumed the duites of the presidential office than the aggressive policy inaugurated by Roosevelt for the prosecution of lawless and law-defying corporations came to a sudden end. The motive power behind it was withdrawn. The executive office no longer concerned itself with those prosecutions in which Frank Kellogg took a leading part. The local federal machine which has always co-operated in this state with those corporations which in 1901 and again in 1905 dictated Moses E. Clapp's election to the United States Senate took its cue from the attitude of the executive and beginning with Taft's inauguration has lost no fitting opportunity to slighting refer to what President Roosevelt has accomplished in making it difficult and expensive for corporations to violate the statutes or to knock the man conducting government prosecutions in whose capactiy and zeal Roosevelt took special pains to indicate that he had confidence. It suits the purpose of these same corporatons now, in order to punish Kellog for his activity, and to retain the services of a man who has never failed to do their bidding, to take a hand in the rehabilitation of Clapp, whose defeat up to the time of the tariff debate in the present session of congress was practically a foregone conclusion and was freely predicted by politicians who kept in touch with what is going on.

Why Reward Pretenders?

That the proper recognition should be given to those who consistently opposed the tariff enormity everyone will admit. But why reward the pretenders? Singularly enough it is in them the greatest interest is shown by the St. Paul boosters. They are willing enough that what Davis and Lindberg and Hammond have done should be forgotten, if to Clapp and Steenerson and the rest can be attributed a virtue they did not share. Real service is soon lost sight of. Once the people of Minnesota were all worked up over the Porto Rican tariff when it was proposed to levy duties on the products from that dependency imported into the United States. Heatwole, the lone insurgent from this state, was then loudly acclaimed as a patriot by local politicians and by the state press. Who now remembers the service he rendered in helping to insure the performance of an act of national justice?

PAUL PRY.

Why She Was Right.

Haydn had a peculiar way of determining the time in which a piece of music should be sung. On one occasion a female singer in high esteem at court had been appointed to sing one of Haydn's compositions. At the rehearsal she and the conductor differed as to the time of the music. The matter was to be settled by referring it to Haydn himself. When called on to decide he asked the conductor if the singer was handsome.

"Very," was the reply, "and a special favorite with the prince." [illegible]

He Followed Directions.

Red tape leads one to curious lengths. A writer in the Columbus Dispatch tells of a street railway car that picked up a young heifer on its fender and carried it some distance through the street.

In making out the required report to the superintendent the employee wrote in answer to the query on the blank form, "What did the victim say?" "She was carried along on the fender and then rolled off and ran away without saying a word."

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it uniformly cures all curable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. Those sand-like granular wastes, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell and in confidence recommend

Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy
"ALL DEALERS"

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Every case of Rheumatism has its origin and its development in the blood. It is not a disease which is contracted like a cold, but it is in the blood and system before a pain is felt, and the changes in the weather or any physical irregularities, such as a spell of indigestion, bowel disturbance, etc., are merely the exciting causes producing the pains and aches, which are the natural symptoms of the disease. Rheumatism is caused by an excess of uric acid and other corrosive, irritating poisons in the blood, which are carried through the circulation to every part of the system. Every muscle, nerve, membrane, tissue and joint becomes saturated with these acrid, irritating impurities, or coated with fine, insoluble caustic matter, and the sharp, piercing pains or the dull, constant aches are felt with every physical movement. When the blood is filled with uric acid poison, permanent relief cannot be expected from liniments, plasters, or other external treatment. Such measures give temporary relief, but in order to conquer Rheumatism and bring about a complete cure, the uric acid and other inflammatory matter must be expelled, and this cannot be done with external treatment. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism because it is a perfect and entirely vegetable blood purifier. It goes down into the circulation, neutralizes the acids, and dissolves the irritating deposits which are pressing on the sensitive nerves and tissues and producing pain, enriches the weak, sour blood, and removes every atom of impurity from the circulation. So instead of being a weak, sour stream, distributing uric acid to the different parts of the system, the blood is strong and healthy and therefore able to supply every muscle, nerve, bone and tissue with nourishment and strength. Then the inflammation and swelling subside, the pains and aches cease, and not only is Rheumatism permanently cured, but under the fine tonic effects of S. S. S. the entire general health is benefitted and built up. In all forms of Rheumatism, whether acute or chronic, S. S. S. will be found a safe and reliable treatment. Special book on Rheumatism and any medical advice you desire will be furnished free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

Sometime ago, I had Rheumatism and had to quit work. The pain in my back and between my shoulders was so intense I could not rest or sleep. I tried everything, but nothing did me any good till I heard of and took S. S. S. This medicine cured me sound and well. It purified my blood and made me feel like a new man.
CONRAD LOHR,

I was severely troubled with Rheumatism. I had it in my knees, legs and ankles, and any one who has ever had Rheumatism knows how excruciating the pain is and how it interferes with one at work. I was truly in bad shape—having been bothered with it for ten years, off and on. A local physician advised me to use S. S. S. I did so. After taking two bottles I noticed the soreness and pain were greatly reduced. I continued the medicine and was thoroughly cured; all pain, soreness and inflammation gone. I recommend S. S. S. to all Rheumatic sufferers.

A GAME OF BLUFF.

By P. B. ANDERSON

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

While sitting at a table before a cafe on the Champs d'Elysees, Paris, sipping a glass of absinth, I heard voices at a table near by. Several Frenchmen were talking, one of whom was decrying American women. I was young at the time and especially hot headed even for a young man. I had been long enough in France—I was studying medicine there—to know the result to be expected from a quarrel. Nevertheless I threw caution to the winds and, turning to the speaker, said:

"You contemptible French puppy! If I hear another word from you derogatory of my countrywomen I'll break my cane over your head!"

The man looked at me in astonishment, then said in the most polite manner:

"It will not be necessary for m'sieu to do that. It would make a scene and call the attention of the police."

Taking a card from his pocket, he laid it on my table and waited evidently for me to give him mine. Since there was nothing else for me to do I made the exchange, giving him a card on which was my address. Then the party of Frenchmen rose and went away, leaving me to recover my senses.

Unfortunately for us Americans, we have advanced far beyond other races in true chivalry, while the chivalry of barbarism remains with them. The proper thing for the Frenchman to do was to apologize at once for attacking women. Yet his code compelled him to enforce his slanderous talk by trying to kill me. I have never since been able to decide whether I was called upon to resent his remarks. It certainly was not very prudent to do so.

Within an hour one of the party I had seen at the cafe called upon me with a challenge. I was not prepared to "crawfish," so I put on a bold front. But in order to gain time I told my visitor that, having medical examinations on hand, it would be two days before I could grant his principal a meeting; he would hear from me in due time. He was a dapper little fellow with a waxed mustache and goatee. In making his exit from the room, backing out with an excess of politeness, he brought up against the door, which stood open. Unruffled, however, by the incident, he recovered his stability and took his departure. Notwithstanding the critical position I was in I could not refrain from laughing.

The examinations I had referred to were in fencing and shooting in order to discover at which I would have the best chance for my life. I repaired immediately to a shooting gallery and on account of defective vision, having to use my left hand, in fifty shots missed the target thirty times and hit the center once (by accident). Not seeing any chance with powder and ball, I repaired to the fencing academy of M. Fournier, told my story to its celebrated principal and asked him if he could put me in any condition to fight within the limit of time. He gave me a foil and fenced with me for half an hour, at the end of which time he told me there must be something the matter with my sight since my thrusts invariably fell far short of the mark. I told him that an accident had deprived me of the use of one eye, with the accompanying loss of power to adjust a focus.

"In that case," he said, "it would be better for me to use a pistol, since the distance of my enemy would then make no difference." When I told him that it was my right eye that was affected and unfortunately I was not left handed, he looked very grave.

On a table was a pile of circulars of the fencing academy, each bearing a half tone picture of its principal. I picked up one of them, remarking that I would keep it for the likeness, whereupon M. Fournier opened a drawer in which were a number of cabinet size photographs of himself and, selecting one, handed it to me. I asked him to put his signature on it, and he wrote:

To Dr. Alexander Germain, whose skill with the foil far exceeds mine.
GUSTAVE FOURNIER.

An idea had struck him, and the moment I read what he had written it struck me. With a grateful pressure of the hand I left him and, going to my rooms, placed his photograph in a conspicuous place on my mantel. Then I sent a message to my adversary's second that I would be happy to see him with a view to settling the preliminaries of a meeting.

All Paris knew the face of Gustave Fournier, and my visitor had not entered my room before he noticed the picture and, going to it, read the presentation inscription. He then took the seat I offered him with a different expression on his face.

"To begin," I said, looking at him savagely, "having the choice of weapons, I choose rapiers. I prefer extra size, extra length, if they can be obtained, and desire that the point and both sides of the blades be as sharp as they can be ground."

He listened to all I had to say without a remark and left me to report the terms. He returned after awhile with the statement that his principal had been misunderstood; that he had the highest regard and admiration for American women and could not consent to meet me on such an issue.

I looked much disappointed, though I felt inexpressible relieved. However, I told the gentleman that I must of course accept an apology, but warned his principal in future to be more careful of his utterances.

I took ten lessons of Fournier at $50

FROM SAVAGERY to MINIONS of the LAW

By WILL P. SHAFTER

THIS mutiny of 30 members of the Philippine constabulary at Davao has brought to notice that splendid organization, founded on the remnants of Aguinaldo's insurrectionary army in the early days of the American occupation. For the last eight eight years they have given to the islands a season of law and order and to various tribes of our newer domain a respect for the majesty of the great nation of whose army they form, though indirectly, an important part.

The mutiny, in itself, amounted to little. One American planter was killed by the bullets of the mutineers and there were two or three men wounded. Then the loyal members of the constabulary, with the backing of small detchments of the Twenty-third and Twenty-fifth United States infantry, chased the would-be revolutionaries back into the fastnesses of the Davaoan hills and, within 48 hours of the first notice of the difficulty reaching headquarters the first internal serious trouble since the organization of the corps was at an end.

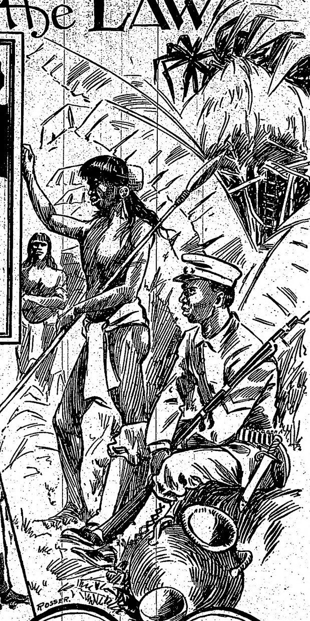
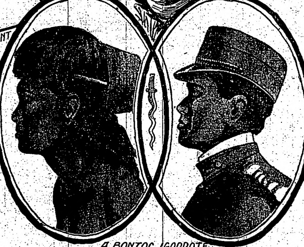
SAME RECRUITS ON DAY OF ENLISTMENT





A BONTOC IGORROTE
BEFORE AND AFTER

The Philippine constabulary was organized just nine years ago. At the conclusion of the insurrection of 1899-1900 the military governor of the Philippines, Gen. Arthur McArthur, issued the following order:

"In order to encourage among the people the idea of self-protection against robbers and roving bands of criminals, with which the country abounds, department commanders are authorized to arm the local police in towns where such action, in their judgment, would be prudent and expedient. For this purpose requisitions may be submitted to the division headquarters for caliber .45 Colt's revolvers and an adequate supply of ammunition. This arm will be replaced at an early date by a more suitable weapon.

"For the better performance of the duties contemplated it is desired that the organization of police be systematized and, if possible, the scope of action extended so as to make these constabulary bodies, by means of mounted detachments, conservators of the peace and safety of districts, instead of confining their operations to areas limited by the boundaries of towns and barracks.

"Department commanders are empowered to enforce the provisions of this order by approriate instructions."

By the autumn of 1900 some organization of the constabulary had been effected and in February, 1901, the Philippine government had, in addition to the army and the native scouts then on duty, an embryo of the present efficient constabulary force numbering 2,571 men.

The newly organized body had an amusing complexity of personnel and diversity of armament. It included every race and every color, every language and every degree of civilization, from cultured Castilians of the Malecon drive to the dusky savage of Mindanao and Negros. The catalogue of their weapons was fully as mixed as their racial affiliations.

The organization grew in numbers and in popularity. At first the ill-disposed were prone to take chances with the little "coppers." They had seen them as soldiers of the army of Aguinaldo driven from point to point by the husky soldiers of the United States until they had become imbued with the idea that running was their chief and only accomplishment. It took but a few brushes with them to show that they had gained something of Uncle Sam's determination to do things in his own way and when the way of the preserver of order and the native disorganizer ran counter something had to drop, and drop hard. Gradually the good work of the constabulary became understood and with the spread of their reputation for keeping things straight the minor disorders of the urban and agricultural communities became fewer and fewer.

When at the last pacification of the civilized and semi-civilized portions of the islands became an established fact the constabulary took up the work of teaching the hill tribes, the head hunters and professional ladrones that the plying of their various forms of nefarious business or pleasure anywhere near a constabulary post was a highly unwholesome pastime. When the hillmen and others got enough of going out on trouble hunts the constabulary organized little trips on their own account and went back into the woods to drag out the real bad men and teach them the art of behaving themselves even under their own vines and banana trees.

One of the most remarkable things about the organization of the constabulary has been their extreme amenability to discipline and their readiness to assimilate western ideas of conduct and deportment by the members of the force. In the illustrations will be noticed photographs of a detachment of Moro and Subano recruits. These pictures of the same group of men were taken only four months apart. In the first the barefoot, disheveled, turbaned band had just entered the service as the veriest of rookies. In the second picture, straight, trim, clean, well-drilled and set up fit to make even a regular look to his laurels, they are presented again. In a third of a year they have been converted from semi-savagery and are representative members of one of the best disciplined bodies of troops in the world.

The Philippines have been divided into districts by the constabulary and each of these districts—there are five in all—contains about a thousand of these soldier policemen. The force numbers, in addition to the subdistrict of Palawan and the Constabulary school at Intramuros, Manila, something over 5,000.

They are under the command of Brig.-Gen. Henry H. Bandholtz, who holds the title of director. There is an assistant director, two inspectors and a staff of about a dozen officers attached to the headquarters at Manila. There is a director for each of the general districts of the archipelago and these districts in turn are divided into subdistricts and minor stations, some of the smaller stations having only half a dozen policemen in charge.

In the early days of the force the officers of commissioned rank were all Americans. A large percentage, a majority, in fact, are still natives of the States, but there is always opportunity for the ambitious and educated Filipino to reach a promotion if by diligence, fidelity and good hard work he desires to accomplish it.

The force at first appeared in a great variety of uniforms, everything from the cast-off blue and white drill of their former conquerors, the Spaniards, to the rusty blue flannel shirts and khaki breeches of the American volunteers, who put Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo out of business. To-day they are all uniformed alike and their appearance is distinctly natty. Khaki for service and general wear, with shoulder cords and facings of artillery red, caps or campaign hats, in accordance with the season, wool puttees and comfortable canvas shoes complete the rig.

For dress occasions the officers wear snowy duck and the enlisted men are privileged to provide themselves with a similar costume for fiesta days and Sundays if they so desire. The Mahometan members of the organization wear the tarboosh or fez instead of the cap, as may be seen in the picture of the Moro detachment, which is known officially as Company A. Fifth district constabulary. The fez is of crimson felt and the tassel which hangs to the eyebrows is of yellow silk.

A portion of the force is mounted. It is the hope of the Philippine government that, as the islands become more and more orderly and the necessity for the retention of regular cavalry has passed, they will be able to make nearly the whole constabulary a mounted organization. Horses or the little Philippine ponies have been used most of the time, one of the pictures shows what the men have been put to at times of flood, the carabo, the unique Philippine beast of burden, having been used as a cavalry horse on more than one occasion. When on land his progress is perhaps a trifle slow, but he is a mud horse of high degree, a splendid wader and an even better swimmer. Some of the Americans who have had occasion to use the carabo as a means of locomotion say that they would be almost willing to attempt the crossing of the Pacific astride his bony shoulders.

As a supplement to the army of occupation and a go-between that is not military in anything save arms and discipline and which the insular government can use as it will and when or wherever it is needed the Philippine constabulary stand comparable to any irregular force in the world. They have much in common with the Indian police maintained for much similar purposes by the viceregal government of British India, but they are more the soldier than even that famous body of conservers of the law. Their discipline has improved with rapid strides and has kept pace with their efficiency and usefulness.

The constabulary maintains the finest military band in the islands. It was their band which participated in the inauguration of President Taft and which later toured the United States, giving concerts.

CURIOSITIES OF BIRD-NESTING

An authority says: "It is not at all an uncommon thing to find the first and sometimes second egg of a young bird abnormally small, but I came across a case some few years ago which was quite unique. In April, 1901, I was hunting for a few clutches of the carrion crow in some small woods, which were their favorite nesting places in that district. I walked right through the first wood without success, but on leaving it I saw, perched on a tree some distance away, two crows. Guessing that I had disturbed them and that they were watching me, I walked on for some distance, still keeping my eye on them. Sure enough, as soon as they were satisfied that I was leaving, one of them made off straight for a large oak tree at the extreme end of the wood I had just left. On returning I discovered the nest and the reason I had missed it. It was built out on the extreme end of the lowest limb of the tree, within 10 feet of the ground, and hidden by the undergrowth below—a most unusual position. I climbed to the nest and was much astonished at the contents. In it were four miniature crow's eggs, very little larger than blackbird's eggs, and in shape almost round. On blowing them I found the shells were abnormally thick and tough for the size of the egg and they contained no yolk. Knowing that crows invariably remain in the same locality year after year, the following season I went to look for my friends again and to my great delight found the nest in a very similar position in another oak tree within 30 yards of the first nest. It contained five eggs, four exact counterparts of the first clutch and one of normal size, the only one to contain any yolk. The following season I found them for the third time again quite close to the previous nests; this time there were four eggs, only one small one and three full size."

MOVEMENT FOR WORLD PEACE

Workingmen of Toronto Declare in Favor of Universal Strike to Prevent War.

"The workingmen of Toronto have taken an advanced step toward world peace that might well be followed by their brothers in other large cities," said D. A. Raymond of the Queen City of Canada at the Raleigh.

"Just before I left Toronto the labor council of Toronto went on record as opposed to war and in favor of a universal strike to prevent it. It was declared that if Germany and Great Britain flew at each other's throat the workers in both countries would go on strike. If that step were taken, it was declared, the war would have to be called off. The Toronto council purposes to take up this method of preventing war and enlist the workingmen of other communities with a view of bringing about concerted action in the event of war. The council passed a resolution which, in effect, declared that inasmuch as the wars of the past were commercial wars, either for the possession of new territory or new trading rights, and as those wars were in the interests of the wealthy classes and paid for generally with the lives of the workers, that the workingmen should be opposed to the enormous expenditures of money for warlike purposes on the part of first class nations.

"It was proposed to establish a universal agreement among the workers of Europe and America whereby the danger of war might be averted by the concerted action of the workers, either by their refusal to fight or by letting those who make the quarrels fight it out themselves or by a general strike of labor in countries about to fight.

"This is the first time I knew of the workingmen to take any active step in the movement for world peace, but to my mind they have presented the most effective proposition that has yet been suggested, and I hope the workingmen of other cities will promptly co-operate with the Toronto council."—Washington Post.

Kidney trouble makes weak, weary, worn women. Backache, hip pains, dizziness, headaches, nervousness, languor, urinary troubles make women suffer untold misery. Ailing kidneys are the cause. Doan's Kidney Pills brought quick relief and a final cure and now I am in the best of health."

TROUBLE IN ROYAL PALACE.

Tidings Borne by Amateur Actor Sufficient to Lead Hearers to Expect the Worst.

The Shakespeare club of New Orleans used to give amateur theatrical performances that were distinguished for the local prominence of the actors. Once a social celebrity, with a gorgeous costume, as one of the lords in waiting had only four words to say: "The queen has swooned." As he stepped forward his friends applauded vociferously. Bowing his thanks, he faced the king and said, in a high-pitched voice: "The swoon has queened."

There was a roar of laughter; but he waited patiently, and made another attempt:

"The sween has cooned."

Again the walls trembled and the stage manager said in a voice which could be heard all over the house: "Come off, you doggoned fool."

But the ambitious amateur refused to surrender, and in a rasping falsetto, as he was assisted off the stage, he screamed: "The coon has sweened."—Success Magazine.

They Were Good Mothers.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton is quoted as saying that a woman's first duty is to develop all her powers and possibilities, that she may better guide and serve the next generation. Mrs. Stanton raised seven uncommonly healthy and handsome children, says an admirer of hers, and the children of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe testify to the virtues of the noted woman as a mother. The eagle may be as good a mother as the hen or the goose.

Self-Made.

"I might say to you, young men, that I am a self-made man."

"In what respect?" asked an impertinent youth.

"In this respect, if you must know," replied the orator. "I made myself popular with men who had a pull and thus obtained my present lofty position."

Well, What?

"Johnny, leave me alone and don't ask me another question!"

Delightfully So.

"And you like it now?"

"You bet I do."

"And why do you like Shakespeare after seeing me in 'Hamlet?'"

"Shakespeare is so different!"

Cycle Dealer—Here is a cyclometer I can recommend. It is positively accurate; not at all like some cyclometers, which register two miles, perhaps, where you have only ridden one.

Miss de Byke—You haven't any of that kind, have you?

Severe.

Samuel Gompers was talking in the smokeroom of the Baltic about a recent newspaper attack on a rich corporation.

"It was a cruel attack," Mr. Gompers chuckled. "It was as cruel as the Jonesville Clarion's paragraph about old Deacon Hiram Ludlow.

"This paragraph headed the Clarion's obituary column. It said:

"'Deacon Hiram Ludlow of Frisble township, aged 82, passed peacefully away on Thursday last from single blessedness to matrimonial bliss after a short but severe attack by Maria Higgins, a blooming widow of 37 summers.'"—Detroit Journal.

The Newer Way.

Many ideas in regard to women have entirely changed, and among the better and wiser changes is that old thought that the women who were given to good works must needs be dowdy. It is undeniable that "good" women used to wear dowdiness as a sort of hall mark of virtue. As a matter of fact, dowdiness is merely a mark of bad taste and a sign of some lack in the mind. Women are no longer lacking in the wisdom that chooses pretty rather than ugly clothing, and those who do not make the best of their appearance are losing a golden opportunity of giving pleasure.

Your Salary.

The universe pays every man in his own coin; if you smile, it smiles upon you in return; if you frown, you will be frowned at; if you sing, you will be invited into gay company; if you think, you will be entertained by thinkers; and if you love the world and earnestly seek for the good that is therein, you will be surrounded by loving friends, and nature will pour into your lap the treasures of the earth. Censure, criticise and hate, and you will be censured, criticised and hated by your fellow men.—N. W. Zimmerman.

IN AGONY WITH ECZEMA.

Whole Body a Mass of Raw, Bleeding, Torturing Humor—Hoped Death Would End Fearful Suffering.

In Despair; Cured by Cuticura.

"Words cannot describe the terrible eczema I suffered with. It broke out on my head and kept spreading until it covered my whole body. I was almost a solid mass of sores from head to foot. I looked more like a piece of raw beef than a human being. The pain and agony endured seemed more than I could bear. Blood and pus oozed from the great sore on my scalp, from under my finger nails, and nearly all over my body. My ears were so crusted and swollen I was afraid they would break off. Every hair in my head fell out. I could not sit down, for my clothes would stick to the raw and bleeding flesh, making me cry out from the pain. My family doctor did all he could, but I got worse and worse. My condition was awful. I did not think I could live, and wanted death to come and end my frightful sufferings.

"In this condition my mother-in-law begged me to try the Cuticura Remedies. I said I would, but had no hope of recovery. But oh, what blessed relief I experienced after applying Cuticura Ointment. It cooled the bleeding and itching flesh and brought me the first real sleep I had had in weeks. It was as grateful as ice to a burning tongue. I would bathe with warm water and Cuticura Soap, then apply the Ointment freely. I also took Cuticura Resolvent for the blood. In a short time the sores stopped running, the flesh began to heal, and I knew I was to get well again. Then the hair on my head began to grow, and in a short time I was completely cured. I wish I could tell everybody who has eczema to use Cuticura. Mrs. Wm. Hunt, 135 Thomas St., Newark, N. J., Sept. 28, 1908."

Aid Fight Against Tuberculosis.

At the recent meeting of the National Association of Bill Posters, held in Atlanta, Ga., it was decided to donate to the campaign against tuberculosis $1,200,000 worth of publicity. The bill posters in all parts of the United States and Canada will fill the vacant spaces on their 3,500 bill boards with large posters illustrating the ways to prevent and cure consumption. The Poster Printers' association has also granted $200,000 worth of printing and paper for this work. This entire campaign of billboard publicity will be conducted under the direction of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis in co-operation with the National Bill Posters' association.

A Realist.

"I am a great believer in realism," remarked the poet.

"Yes?" we queried with a rising inflection, thereby giving him the desired opening.

"I sometimes carry my ideas of realism to a ridiculous extreme," continued the poet.

"Indeed!" we exclaimed inanely, somewhat impatient to reach the point of his witticism.

"Yes," continued the poet, "the other day I wrote a sonnet to the gas company and purposely made the meter defective."

At this point we fainted.

WE CAN WIN CHINA

Former Consul Denby Says Field Is Limitless for America.

For the Conquest of the Chinese Trade Field United States Must Cease to Regard Empire Merely as Market Place.

Washington.—"The American dollar with the American man behind it. That," said Charles Denby, recently consul general at Shanghai, who is in Washington en route to a new post of duty at Vienna, "should be the motto for the conquest of the Chinese trade field. To achieve success we must cease to regard China merely as a market and begin to consider it a region for permanent investment. We cannot hope to sell our goods by standing at the doors of our warehouses. We must get closer to the Chinese people. They are unusually friendly toward Americans as a result of our generous policy in Chinese affairs during recent years. The government is likewise cordial, and investment of American capital is desired.

"The time must come when our financiers and business men to promote American trade in China will regard seven per cent. in that empire as seven per cent. here. It is futile to hope for orders for American materials to be used in the construction works financed by foreign capital. In all government loans made for the construction of railroads, etc., it is now purchased from the nation providing the funds. I have known Germans constructing a railroad in Shantung to refuse to consider American tenders for material and equipment solely on the ground that the orders must go to Germany, even at a higher price, because the enterprise was being financed by German banks.

"One feature of the Chinese industrial situation has escaped attention here. It is that the empire is at the threshold of what, I believe, will be an era of remarkable manufacturing activity. The American Tobacco company, which operates in the east as the British-American Tobacco company, manufactures, from American tobacco largely, vast quantities of cigarettes. The cheap labor available at their factories in Shanghai, Tankow and Mukden, together with their employment of the most modern machinery, enables them to prove the wisdom of production close to the consumer. It is my opinion that the manufacture of ready-to-wear clothing in large quantities would be a most profitable pursuit. The Standard Oil company has made vast profits by getting close to the consumer. Its oil boats deliver petroleum to the most remote sections of the empire without recourse to the middleman."

Chinese Ban on Japs.

Tokyo.—The greatest stumbling block in the way of an amicable settlement between China and Japan of the differences over the Antung-Mukden railway is the order of the Chinese authorities that land be sold to Japanese along the line under severe penalty. This and several other questions concerning Japanese policy in China will be determined in a short time, it is expected, as the whole matter has been placed in the hands of the emperor by Foreign Minister Komura.

DIES IN SECLUSION

Woman of Wealthy Family Lived Lonely Life for Years.

Deserted by Husband and Son as Result of a Family Quarrel, She Finally Hid Herself in Little Cottage.

Trenton, N. J.—After secluding herself in a lonely cottage for 18 years, during which time she preferred her loneliness to the luxuries of a mansion in Germany, Mrs. Katherine Zimmerman, a member of a wealthy German family, is dead in the Mercer hospital here.

A broken heart was responsible for the woman's desire for seclusion. The first trip she had made from her trim little cottage in 18 years was in the ambulance which took here to the hospital. Mrs. Zimmerman, who was 83 years old, was surrounded by wealth in her childhood, passed near Berlin, with a poor lad named Henry Zimmerman as a playmate of the little Fraulein van Augur. In time Zimmerman told of his love, which was reciprocated. Marriage seemed impossible, because of his poverty. He sought the land of liberty to win wealth. He was but moderately successful.

Much to his surprise he received a letter from his fiancee declaring her willingness to leave her home, face separation from her parents and come to her sweetheart. Zimmerman accepted the sacrifice and the couple were married in this country. They located at Wilkesbarre, Pa. For 35 years the couple lived in peace. One son was born. He had grown to manhood when a family quarrel brought about separation between husband and wife.

Mrs. Zimmerman came to this city. Both her husband and son had disappeared. She had then passed the half-century mark and soon came into possession of a small fortune by the death of a relative.

After continuing her search for seven years, Mrs. Zimmerman wearied of the world. She purchased a cottage in the suburbs and began her life of seclusion. She decided never to talk to a human being again. She told her resolution to several friends here, members of prominent German families, and they consented to see that she was supplied with food without leaving her home, as she desired. She arranged to pay the money necessary for this.

Day after day during her entire period of isolation food had been left on the rear porch of her home in the morning, at noon and in the evening. To prevent herself from being seen or seeing others, those who brought the supplies would be far away before the aged woman would touch the food. The meals, which were always left in a basket, were procured by Mrs. Zimmerman by lowering from the upper room of the house, in which she lived almost entirely, a rope with a hook attached, by means of which she would haul up the receptacle.

TOMB AND BODIES ARE SOLD

Vault Wherein Lay the Owner's Dead Disposed of at a Forced Public Sale.

Greensburg, Pa.—The spectacle of a vault wherein lay the owner's dead being disposed of at a forced sale was witnessed the other day at the old Unity cemetery. The sale was necessitated by the insistence of creditors of the owner, once a wealthy land owner at Latrobe.

Then it was decided that no legal course was open for the auctioneer but to cry the sale in the plot where lie scores of pioneer dead and the bidding was started at $250. Others raised it to $600. Then from the crowd emerged an old woman, whose only daughter and grandson lay in the vault. In a broken voice she bid $605. A few more bids raising the figure $5 were offered by her and each was met by the other bidders. With an agonized glance at the receptacle of her dead she turned and left the cemetery.

The vault was finally sold to J. J. Peppary for $745, but notice was promptly given on the part of the owner that the sale would be contested.

Monkey Robs Apple Tree.

Wilkesbarre, Pa.—Jacob Smith of this city thought all along that some of the neighbors were robbing his apple trees, as the fruit was disappearing rapidly. He kept watch on the trees and early the other morning he saw a monkey, owned by an Italian organ grinder of the vicinity, at the top of a tree helping himself.

When the owner of the orchard remonstrated, the monkey threw an apple at him, striking him in the face.

Mr. Smith will take legal steps for vengeance either on the monkey or the monkey's boss.

Millionaire Doesn't Care for Expenses and Changes Residence Site for Better View.

Waukegan, Ill.—That Joseph Medill Patterson, the Chicago millionaire, who owns a palatial home south of Libertyville, doesn't care for expenses when it comes to satisfying his wishes has just come out, the incident occurring when work was started on his mansion, which is now completed.

Patterson bought a large tract of land south of Libertyville and had an architect and lanscaper start work on laying out his home.

Plans for the house were accepted and the contract let, and work ordered started.

One day, after work on the foundation was well started, Patterson happened to drive out to his place.

Driving down the main road leading south of Libertyville, Patterson saw his house rising on a beautiful site, facing the main road in accordance with the plans of the architect and landscaper, who had ordered it built there.

"Here, that isn't where I want my house built. I want it over there a half mile, facing that other road, running east and west. Dig it up and take the house over there.

And the architect did as ordered. He had the foundation taken up and the house was restored on the side road, on a spot which, to some people, is far inferior to the one where the architect and landscaper planned erecting it. But on the new spot the building went up, and now is one of the show places of the locality.

The change in location cost thousands of dollars in general rearrangement of details, etc., but Patterson was satisfied, and that was all to be considered.

JACKIES ARE MOST FRUGAL

Sailors Said to Save More Money Than Any Other Class Despite Tradition of Profligacy.

Washington.—Though "Jack ashore" may have acquired the reputation of being the model spendthrift, the latest statistics of the navy department show him to be a thrifty person when it comes down to year in and year out steadiness.

Jack's pay, though not large, is decidedly regular, and then again Jack has long periods when he has no opportunity to spend at all. If, when he does get a bit of shore leave, he manages to make things hum somewhat faster than the average man in the street and often rolls back to the anchorage in a state of financial depression equal to the treasury of a South American republic, he, ten to one, has not spent it all, for, according to the allotment system in vogue in the navy to-day, the bluejacket has the privilege of allotting any portion of his pay to whomsoever he may designate.

The pamphlet recently published by Assistant Paymaster Jere Maupin, U. S. N., shows 22 per cent. of the sailors are putting something by. The allotment privilege only applies to the men serving on the ships. The sailors on shore duty are presumed to take care of such matters for themselves.

It has been ascertained that employes of corporations generally save less than 20 per cent. of their salaries. In fact the savings are probably nearer ten per cent. on an average.

GRAFTED SKIN COVERS BODY

Woman with Crazy Patchwork Over Flesh Renews Suit for Damages for Burns Received.

Chicago.—Miss Emma Gallagher, 2207 West Harrison street, who had 4,500 particles of skin grafted on her body 12 years ago as the result of burns received while cleaning clothing with benzine, has resumed her fight in the superior court against a sewing machine company to secure damages on the charge that she was slandered by the company's agent.

The suit came up for trial a year ago and Miss Gallagher was given judgment for $50,000. On the ground that the judgment was excessive, Judge Wright, from the country district, who heard the case, set the verdict aside.

The rehearing comes up before Judge Abbott. Mrs. Gallagher, who is crippled, declares she will fight the case to a finish.

"My terrible experience of 12 years ago has not in the least affected my fighting qualities," she said. [illegible] I think it has increased my aggressive nature. In those 4,500 pieces of skin on my anatomy is represented every nation on earth, and I think I have inherited some of the fighting qualities that go with them."

The skin grafting process undergone by Miss Gallagher covered a period of two years, and during that time 19 grafting operations were performed. More than 2,000 persons contributed portions of their anatomy in order that the woman's life might be saved.

DECREASE IN TAX RECEIPTS

"Dry" Wave Causes Shrinkage in Internal Revenue Collections of $5,290,773.

Washington.—Uncle Sam's pocket book suffered a shrinkage because of the temperance wave during the fiscal year ended July 30, 1909, during which period there was a decrease of $5,290,773 in whisky tax receipts, as shown by the preliminary report of the internal revenue bureau, just issued by Acting Commissioner Robert Williams, Jr.

Whisky tax collections last year were $134,868,034, against $140,158,807 for the preceding year. Receipts from beer and other fermented liquors amounted to $57,456,411, a decrease of $2,351,205, compared with 1908. Internal revenue receipts from all sources were $246,212,719.

Illinois led the country with $43,141,771 internal revenue paid into the treasury. Other states in which the tax exceeds $20,000,000 are Kentucky, Indiana, Pennsylvania and New York.

"FAMOUS AUTOMOBILE CASE" IS DECIDED

Court Holds that Guerin Who Held Machine for Storage Had No Lien.

Automobile Kept Small Army of Deputy Sheriffs Busy.

The case of Geo. Guerin vs. Lewis A. Nelson but known as "the automobile case," more or less famous was decided by Judge Watts last week.

The case is an interesting one since about a year ago it was the cause of much excitement. Some horse robbers traded stolen horses to Newberry, the Thief River Falls liveryman for an automobile. The automobile was left at the Guerin livery barn in this city. When Newberry learned that the horses had been stolen he demanded the automobile, but Guerin claimed a lien for the storage of the machine and there was nothing doing. Then a small army of deputy sheriffs armed with formal appearing papers and formidable instruments of torture made a siege on the Guerin livery barn but Guerin held the fort, and the automobile, chained to the floor, was not moved because there were not enough deputy sheriffs to move the barn, and Gueoin couldn't be moved from his determination to keep possession of the machine.

The court holds that Newberry, the rightful owner of the machine, has a right to possession and that Guerin, whatever claim he may have for compensation for storing the machine, does not have a lien.

The ease and dignity with which Judge S. A. Swanson performs the marriage ceremony is making the wedding deparment the most popular institution in the county. The judge's office is becoming as famous as the little church around the corner. On Tuesday two young people came from North Dakota just on purpose to say the fateful—not to say fatal—words before our own judge. Miss Ragna Torkilson and Mr. Carl Fosser came from Barton, N. Dak., and PaTorkilson didn't know a blessed thing about it. It was a regular Gretna Green affair. After the ceremony the bride said that they were going to "surprise the folks." The groom didn't say anything but he looked satisfied. It's a safe bet that they'll get a "bless you, my children" from dad when that gentleman learns with what neatness and dispatch the job was done.

Ed L. Healy's family and a lot of the neighbors had a shocking time Tuesday night, all brought about by a prank of the lightning of Monday night's storm. The lightning burned the insulation from some of the wireing on the house. The wire came in contact with the metal eave spouting and then everything about the place that could serve as a conductor became charged. The eave spouting became hot, very hot, and set fire to the house. Mr. Healy poured water on the fire from a sprinkling can. The stream of water served as a conductor and Mr. Heal got his shock. Somebody stepped on the top of the cistern and got his and then somebody stepped on the overflow pipe from the cistern and got his. Then Verne Healy climbed on a ladder to the roof, but the ladder bumped against the eave spouting and Verne got his and added a good loud yell to the chorus of noises. The excitement caused the neighbors to flock to the Healy home and then the neighbors proceeded to get shocked in various ways. The situation was getting serious and the house had caught fire in several places when Dr. Smith, the electric light physician, was summoned. The electric light plant was shut down and the cause of the trouble remedied.

KILLED HER CHILDREN

Insane Polk County Woman Committed Horrible Murder.

The most brutal and unnatural murder in the history of northern Minnesota was committed at a farm house near Tabor Polk county, last Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Anton Straus killed her two children age one and three years.

The details of the crime are most revolting. There is no doubt that the woman's unnatural act was induced by an insane delusion. After her husband had gone to work and the other children were in the garden, Mrs. Straus took the two little children to the chicken house and placing their headupon a block used in killing chickens she killed one and then the other with an axe. She then went to a neighbor's house and asked for a gun that with that she might kill the other children. An investigation was made at once resulting in the discovery of the bodies of the murdered children. Mrs. Stauss was taken to East Grand Forks where she was detaiend by the sheriff and arraigned in municipal court, charged with infantcide. However, the charge was withdrawn and she was taken to the asylum at Fergus Falls.

There is no doubt that Mrs. Straus is insane. She had twice been a patient in the hospital at Fergus Falls and was out on parole at the time of committing the murder. She was relead from the hospital seven weeks ago and since that time had appeared to be rational, but it was apparent that she had suddenly become insane.

When questioned about the crime she would tell a connected story for a time and then lose control of herself entirely. Mrs. Straus is thirty years old. To the authorities she said that her parents reside at Thief River Falls.

EXCITED AT THIEF RIVER.

Think Deposits of Iron Ore Have Been Discovered.

Reports from Thief River state that while excavating the basement for the new armory in that city the workmen discovered a quantity of rock and other material giving every indication of being iron ore.

On closer examination by those familiar with the iron range ores by comparison with ores from that section the opinion that actual iron ore has been found is confirmed. How extensive is the body and of what commercial value it may prove to be are matters of mere conjecture. For years at frequent intervals well diggers and explorers have been surprised to find iron ore indications in this section west and southwest of the Red Lakes. The samples found in the basement are on view in the office of Daniel Shaw, and will be subjected to expert examination, says the report.

Payed Heavy Find.

A farmer living near New Richland was recently taken before the court on complaint of a state pure food inpector charging him with selling incubator eggs which had failed at hatching, and the judge gave him the smallest fine possible which was $50.

The merchants had been complaining of receiving many eggs that were not fresh as was desirable, and he did not at that time know that any of their good farmer patrons would deliberately sell eggs that had been through a state of incubation, but one of the state detectives dropped in on them, uninvited, and finding the decaying eggs in the possession of the merchant was about to have him pulled when the farmer came in with another case of eggs and in this batch of eggs the detective discovered the evidence he wanted and the farmer confessed, thus relieving the merchant of responsibility. He pleaded guilty and was let off with a fine of $50 and went home a sadder but a wiser man.—Wells Advocate.

HORSE ROBBERS GET FINE BLACK TEAM

Robbery Occurred Sunday Night and no Trace of Robbers Yet.

Took Horses From Fred Gother's Barn Near Wylie.

A fine black team belonging to Fred Gother, who resides near Wylie was stolen from the Gother barn Sunday night, Aug. 22. It is not know at what time during the night the horses were taken, because nothing was known of the robbery until Monday morning.

The robbers hitched the horses to a two-seated buggy and drove away. In leaving the Gother farm they drove west, but the track was lost almost as soon as it left the farm and could not be followed.

The horses are valuable, estimated to be worth at least $400. Sheriff Nelson got out cards offering a reward of $200 for information leading to the arrest of the robbers and officials in northern Minnesota and North Dakota towns have been notified of the robbery. No trace of the robbers has been found though hope of capturing them has not been given up.

The horses are three and four years old, jet black, and weigh about 1100 pounds. Both horses have clipped manes and the four year old has a white spot on right hind leg just above the hoof.

MISS RING DROWNED.

Was Well Known in Red Lake Falls.

Miss Mary Ring, who was one of the teachers in the county training school for teachers in Red Lake Falls two years ago and who had many friends here, was drowned Sunday afternoon. The accident occurred while she was bathing in the Pomme de Terre river at Morris, Minn., her home.

It will be remembered that Miss Ring while here two years ago was rescued from drowning at Maple Lake by Ed L. Healy and Miss Hazel Healy.

An Automobile Dog-Catcher.

The dog is probably a much more petted and vauable animal in Paris than in any other city in the world. A stray dog is not dropped into an ill-smelling pen on a wagon and unconcernedly driven off to the pound to be drowned, but is placed in a well driven ventilated cage on an automobile and transported in comfort to the station where the owners of stray dogs go in search of their missing pets. One does not know of the nourishing qualities of hard barley until you have tried golden grain belt beer. It gives vigor to the tired body and srengthens the brain. The Don's Opinion.

Fashion is as inexorable in men's as in women's dress. The undergraduate is perhaps the most telling example of this. It was so even a century ago, when Oxford led the way in adopting the new nankeen trousers that were to supersede tight breeches and top boots. Just about that period a don of Trinity met an undergraduate arrayed in all the splendor of the new fashion. "Young man," said the don severely, "you will come to no good. You wear nankeen trousers and keep a dog." The young man afterward became Dr. Sumner and bishop of Winchester.—London Chronicle.

CHARTER ELECTION NEXT TUESDAY

Will Vote on Adoption of Report of Board of Freeholders.

A special election for the city of Red Lake Falls will be held next Tuesday to vote on the proposition of adopting the amendments to the city charter recommended by a commission appointed for that purpose some time ago.

Stripped of the wherefores and whereases of legal phraseology, the amendment will give the council the right to grant long-time franchises for the conveyance of electricity, gas, water or sewerage. This amendment is necessary to ensure the development of the water powers of the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers, as manufacturing enterprises will not locate here unless they can be assured of long-term power contract.

Under the provisions of the present charter a franchise for more than five years is not permissible, and it is to correct this manifest barrier to manufacturing development that the election is called.

The Gazette believes it the part of wisdom and business sagacity to give the council power to grant long-time franchises, especially in view of the fact that exclusive or perpetual franchises are prohibited.

SALOONS MUST CLOSE

Manomen, Waubun, Callaway and Other Reservation Towns Will be Dry.

John R. Howard, Indian superintendent at the White Earth reservation, has received instructions from Washington that steps will be taken at once to notify all saloons doing business within the White Earth reservation to close the doors within thirty days.

The saloon keepers at Manomen, Waubun, Callaway and Ogema have been notified that they must cease doing business. It is said that the saloon men will comply with the law without objection.

DEATH OF MRS. HASLET.

Sad Bereavement in the Home of B. Haslet.

Lula Belle Haslet, wife of B. Haslet, died Monday at the family home on the Chas. Sampson farm, ten miles east of this city. It will be remembered that Mr. and Mrs. Haslet's young son died a few weeks ago from typhoid fever, which was also the cause of Mrs. Haslet's death. Now two little daughters, aged one and seven years, are quite seriously ill with the fever.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon. The relatives and friends of the family accompanied the remains to the cemetery, where they were met by Rev. D. K. Laurie of Thief River Falls, and funeral services were held at the grave.

Mrs. Haslet was a young woman. She was not yet thirty-two years of age, having been born January 1, 1878. It is indeed a sad affliction that has come to Mr. Haslet, and the sympathy of the people of the community goes out to him in his bereavement.

TWO MAGNIFICENT NEW STRUCTURES

The New Hotel, St. Paul, and New Grand Stand at State Fair Grounds.

(Special Correspondence to the Red Lake Falls Gazette)

St. Paul Sept. 1st.

The new million dollar hotel, The St. Paul of St. Pual, already presents a very imposing front as one looks up Fifth street from Wabasha or below. It is the first really modern hotel building to be erected in the state. Its frame is of steel. The facing of the first two stories is of gray sandstone Above that it is of large tile brick. Very few common brick have been used, nearly all being of the hollow tile variety. The floors are of tile and reinforced concrete, the stairway is of iron, so that except doors and window fames, there will scarcely be anything in the completed building that can possibly burn. Owing to the peculiar design of the building every room in it will be an outside room facing the free air. Each room will have a bath room adjoining. It is too soon to give any description of the reception rooms or other public apartments, but the plans indicate that they will be of imposing dimensions and the specifications call for artistic ornamentation and finish. When completed St. Paul will have a hostelry, if not as large at least as perfect in detail as any in the country.

The State Fair Grand Stand.

A building of an entirely different character, but one likely to attract even more attention and, because of its comparatively isolated location, really much more imposing, will be the grand stand on the state fair ground. It, too, will be absolutely fireproof and as enduring as the eve-lasting hills, being of reinforced concrete and iron throughout. While its main object is to provide seating capacity for those who wish to witness the races, the altlietic perfomances, the fireworks, and the "spectacle" which will take place on the race track; it will serve other important purposes. The front facing outwardly is of castellated design and opens into the extensive space underneath the grand stand which will be divided into compartments to be used for office and exhibition purposes. It is a handsome structure and one of which the fair management is not unreasonably proud. When completed it will cost a lot of money, $275,000, or $75,000 more than the legislative appropiation. This seems a great deal to pay for a building to be used but a single week in the year. Great as it is, however, the grand stand is likely to prove a profitable investment for, as the state fair is managed, the grand stand is its biggest revenue producer.

The State's Hippodrome.

Some criticism has been made, and I think not unjustly, of the prominence given to the pure entertainment features of the fair. The posters covering the blank walls of St. Paul illustrate this. We no longer see pictures of the products of the farm, of thoroughbred horses, of the cattle which add greatly to the wealth of the state, of its hogs, its sheep or its pumpkins. The exhibition of these is no longer relied upon to attract a sophisticated generation. Instead we have a reproduction in posters of the pictures of the charge at Gettysburg which adorns the governor's reception room to advertise a spectacle to be shown in front of the grand stand at night; a representation of the explosion of many colored fireworks; and pictured reproduction of the battle which, with extremly doubtful propriety, the fair management has under

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OPEN TUESDAY

Several New Teachers—Large Freshman Class Will Enter High School.

The public schools will open for the year's work next Tuesday, September 7, and the work will be commenced under most favorable conditions.

During the vacation months the buildings have been thoroughly renovated and some improvements have been made at the Lafayette building. The walls of all of the rooms have been calsomined, the woodwork varnished and some new floors have been put in.

The classes of '07, '08 and '09 have made substantial contributions to the furnishings of the rooms. The members of the class of '09 have given a fine oak, leather upholstered, principal's chair. The classes of '07 and '08 purchased and have placed in each of the rooms a clock. There are thirteen new clocks and now all students will have occasion—and the time—to remember those who have "gone before."

A very large freshman class will enter the high school this year, one of the largest in the history of the school. This is an encouraging condition and will assure a fine record of work in the high school if the new students do what is expected of them. The young people who will make up this class are those who have completed the eighth grade work and the graduates of St. Joseph's school.

New laboratory apparatus and some new text books have been added.

With conditions so favorable and a strong corps of teachers directing the work excellent progress ought to be made.

Work in the grades, up to the seventh grade, will be done at both schools, but there will be seventh grade work at the Washington school, on the north side only, and eighth grade work at the Lafayette school, on the south side. Conditions compel the division of the work in that way. There is not room and not enough teachers have been employed so that work in eight grades can be offered at both schools. It is desirable that the eighth grade work be done at the high school building, so the arrangement is the most satisfactory that could be made since there must be a division of the work.

Supt. Leonard V. Koos will be assisted by a strong high school faculty. Miss Louise E. Twiman of West Sunbury, Pa., who has been a teacher in the high school for three years, will be the principal and will teach latin. Miss Helen Whiney of Oshkosh, Wis., will teach mathematics and science. Miss Minnie C. Gibbs of Anoka, Minn., will teach English and history.

Following is a list of the grade teachers;

Lafayette School—8th grade, Anna J. Liehan River Falls, Wis.; 5th and 6th grades, Helen Clark, Afton, Minn.; 3rd and 4th grades, Clara S. Thompson, Moorhead, Minn.; 2nd grade, Mrs. J. J. Doe, Red Lake Falls; 1st grade, Melissa Williams, Minneapolis, Minn.

Washington School—7th grade, Charlotte N. White, Waddington, N. Y.; 5th and 6th grades, Helen McLean, Winona, Minn.; 3rd and 4th grades, Josephine A. Kaus, Red Lake Falls; 1st and 2nd grades, Henrietta Hennemuth, Red Lake Falls.

Boughtons Return.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. E. Boughton and son returned Tuesday from a two months' tour of the west. While there they visited nearly all the principal cities, including Denver, Colorado Springs, Salt Lake City, Portland, Seattle and Vancouver, and others and engaged in the delightful diversions of mountain-climbing and sea-bathing.

A month was spent at Vancouver, one of the coming cities of the west, and theyt returned via the Canadian Pacific, stopping at the principal mountain resorts, and report a delightful time.

The trip was taken in company with a number of Mr. Broughton's relatives, a party of nine in all, several of whom will remain at the coast until October.

At Glacier, B. C., a visit was paid to the Great Glacier, a vast field of ice, covering thirty-eight square miles, and hundreds of feet in thickness, reaching down the mountin sides, with a river running from its foot, and wild flowers growing twenty feet from the ice.

CHANGE AT GRAND VIEW.

W. H. Krueger will Conduct the House in Future.

Fred Krueger, who has been in the hotel business in Red Lake Falls for many years, has retired from the business. He and his son Carl who have conducted the Grand View hotel under the firm name of Fred Krueger and Son, this week turned the property over to W. H. Krueger who has leased and will run the house. Though the management of the hotel is still in the Krueger family the change gives the new landlord's parents the opportunity to enjoy a well earned and much needed rest.

CO. DITCH ESTABLISHED.

No. 37, Town of Wyandotte. Four Miles Long.

The county commissioners in session last Saturday accepted the engineer's and viewers' reports on proposed county ditch No. 37 and passed a resolution establishing the ditch. Later the job of its construction will be let.

The ditch will be constructed in the town of Wyandotte. It will be four miles long and the estimated cost of construction is $7,000.

STOLEN HORSES ARE RECOVERED

Were Used by Karlstad Bank Robbers to Make Their Getaway.

The fine black horses that were stolen from Fred Gother's barn near Wylie a week ago Sunday night were recovered Saturday afternoon. The horses were found running loose near Fisher.

There is little doubt that the horses were taken by the Karlstad bank robbers, whose only object, apparently, in taking them was to assist them in making their getaway. During the night they drove the horses more than thirty miles, then unnitched them and turned them loose. They hid the buggy and harness in a cornfield, where they were later found. These precautions were no doubt taken to throw any persons who might be following them off the track.

The men have now had time to travel a long distance and there is no chance of ever capturing them.

FLAX STRAW MARKET

Should be Cut Close to Ground and Stacked to Protect From Weather.

The parties who the past summer were figuring on putting in a flax fibre plant here, planning to use a new and improved process which had just been patented, have decided for the present to install their first machines at Duluth or some terminal point as an experiment before locating plant permanently.

The parties who visited here last summer look with a great deal of favor on Red Lake Falls for their permanent location and their coming would mean a great deal for our city. Besides adding an important industry it would create a good market for flax straw and yield a big revenue to the farmer for an article that is now going entirely to waste. A letter just received from them by Mr. Sivertson of the Red Lake Falls Milling company reads as follows:

"While I may not get around to install any machines at your place this winter I would like to be assured that we can get some straw there and if the flax is not all cut will you please tell those you come in contact with that we will want several thousand tons of straw before the next crop and if farmers that have clean, long flax straw on breaking will cut it as close to the ground as possible we will use it. It should be stacked so the weather will not damage it too much and later I will arrange to take care of it."

This invention has been tested and tried and has at last reached perfection. We have a wagon that runs one-third lighter, yet is as strong and durable as any wagon made.

It goes without saying that a load can be moved with less draft on wheels than to slide along the highway and it must follow that a wheel will revolve easier in the same degree when on rollers than when required to slide with friction on the endless surface of the boxing of the hub.

REMSEN BOARD IS APPROVED

FOOD DEPARTMENTS CONFERENCE AGREES TO USE OF BENZOATE OF SODA.

FIGHT WAS BITTER ONE

Association Will Adjourn Today After Election of Officers For Next Year's Work.

Denver, Colo., Aug. 25.—President Roosevelt's famous Remsen "referee board of consulting scientific experts" was endorsed by the convention of the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments today. After a fight in which the term "medicated garbage" was used the association approved of the benzoate of soda as a food preservative.

The resolution which was adopted by a vote of 57 to 42 follows:

"That this Association endorses the report of the referee board of consulting scientific experts appointed by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson at the direction of President Roosevelt upon the use of benzoate of soda in food products."

The delegation from the United States department of Agriculture voted "yes." Secretary Wilson was an attentive spectator but was not a delegate.

A committee headed by Dr. Floyd W. Robinson of Lansing, Mich., which had been appointed to investigate the Remsen board, previously had reported adversely to the board's findings, declaring that benzoate promoted "the practice of concealing insanity methods," and calling upon President Taft to institute another investigation on "Broader lines."

The Association quoted the following resolutions:

"That a more drastic law relative to labeling of oleomargerine be passed by congress.

"That congress be asked not to reduce the tax on colored oleomargarine.

"That the association eliminate any discussion of what is whiskey, pending a settlement of that question at Washington."

The Association will adjourn tomorrow after the election of officers. George L. Flanders of Albany, N. Y., is considered as the probable next president to succeed J. Q. Emery of Wisconsin.

The KITCHEN CABINET

CRANKS.

HAVE you ever at the table sat
And heard some child pipe up:
"I don't like milk in this old glass,
I want it in a cup."
Or maybe some grown-up would say:
"This pie-crust is too thick;
And I'd not dare to eat this fish,
I know 'twould make me sick."

"I don't like this! I can't eat that!"
The children—grown-ups, too,
Know nothing of the simple creed—
"No matter! this will do."

We've crotchets, and we've notions:
Indulge each fad and fancy,
Till women are grown finicky;
Each man is a Miss Nancy.

Oh, for the good old days of yore,
The simple days, and true,
When "this" was just as good as "that,"
And anything "would do."

Two Jewish Recipes.

Salmon pickle: Boil for 20 minutes, a thick slice of salmon in water with a tablespoonful of vinegar. Drain, and meantime prepare a pint of white wine vinegar with two bay leaves, a salt-spoon fennel seed, and salt and pepper. Bring this to boiling point. Place the salmon in a deep dish, and pour the hot vinegar over it, allowing it to stand over night.

Salt water cucumbers: Dissolve five tablespoons of salt and half a teaspoon of pepper in a gallon of cold water. Put in 12 large cucumbers, cover with grape leaves, weight them down and soak for two days. After two days change the leaves, and add a large handful of dill. Keep cool. In six days they will be ready to use. Serve cold as a salad with dressing.

Sardine Salad.

Hollow out the center from large tomatoes, and fill the cavity with chopped sardines. Pile water-cress leaves on top, and add a dash of lemon juice. No other dressing is needed.

A substantial salad is made of the scooped-out tomato filled with canned peas from which the water has been well drained. Add mayonnaise, and if it is to be the "piece de resistance" of the meal, pile nut-meats on top. This supplies the necessary nitrogen, the proteids are in the peas, and carbohydrates in the tomato and dressing. Nothing more hearty is necessary in the hot weather.

THE WATERMELON VINE.

YOU may talk about your menus; a la carte and table d'hote,
Of the banquets of Lucullus that so pleased his Roman throat;
Of the nightingales and peacocks' tongues; the wine of far Tokay;
The caviare from Russia or the spices from Bombay.

These are all fancy dishes, and some think them mighty fine,
But for me, a shady corner by a watermelon vine!

They have disappearing tables worked by electricity;
They press a button, and, behold; a meal for you and me.
They've ices; pates de foie gras; all sorts of fancy frills;
And, I am told, they also have all sorts of aches and ills.

Give me a tablecloth of grass; for napkins, plantains fine,
And then a shady corner by a watermelon vine.

Bridget's Beatitudes.

Blessed is the spinach which is not cooked with grease; the fat forms a coating around the greens, making them resist the action of the gastric juice and turning them from a most healthful and hygienic diet into a harmful load on the stomach.

Blessed is the dash of lemon juice in the apple sauce; it gives a pleasant tang, besides making the fruit a stimulant to the liver.

Blessed are the pillow-slips which are made at least two inches longer than the pillow; they wear much longer.

Blessed is the summer dinner which is not elaborate; it is in poor taste besides being a waste of expense and trouble to prepare fancy meals in the heated term.

Hints on Icing.

Boil together the sugar and water until it forms a ball when dropped in cold water.

Spread icing over the cake when the latter is cold.

If colored sugars are used they should be sprinkled over the cake when both cake and icing are cold and icing is quite stiff.

Egg Lemonade.

Not even the inexperienced young housewife need be told how to make plain lemonade, but the following suggestion may prove to be a nutritious as well as a tasty addition: To six glasses of lemonade add two well beaten eggs, and stir thoroughly.

Save the Feet.

The feet of fowls should never be thrown away. If plunged into boiling water the skin will come off, and leave a soft and gummy membrane which makes rich stock, and jelly for soups, gravies, etc.

Olivia Barton Atkins

Bohemian Cream.

Here is a recipe for a cooling dessert: Soak one box of gelatine for a few moments in one-half pint of cold water. Boil a pint of cream with two tablespoons of sugar and dissolve the gelatine in it. When cool add the well-beaten yolks of three eggs, beat this until it thickens up. Whip one pint of cream and beat into the custard. Pour in molds and set in on ice immediately.

People who bet on the dark horse and lose, of course keep it shady as long as possible.

MALMROS DIES AT ROUEN

GOVERNMENTAL REPRESENTATIVE IN FRANCE WAS MINNESOTA PIONEER.

IN CONSULAR SERVICE

Oscar Malmros, a distinguished soldier, statesmen and lawyer in early Minnesota history, and adjutant general under Gov. Ramsey, from 1861 to 1865, died last week at Rouen, France, where he had served for nearly five years as American counsul.

Mr. Malmros was eighty-three years old. He leaves no family and, so far as is known by his friends in St. Paul, has no relatives living in America. He was born in Schleswig-Holstein, in 1826, and came to this country when twenty-six years old. After some time spent in Milwaukee, where he met with many reverses, he came to St. Paul in 1853. He was a brilliant lawyer, and was soon prominent in Republican politics in this state.

Able Politician.

During Ramsey's campaign for governor he distinguished himself as a politician of unusual capabilities, and after the election was appointed adjutant general by Gov. Ramsey. After the close of the Civil war he was appointed American counsul to Turkey. Subsequently he served in that capacity in Spain and Nova Scotia. He was transferred from the latter post to Colon, Panama, where he was stationed until about five years ago.

On his release from duty at Panama he came to St. Paul in 1904, and was the guest of P. J. Giesen, of 184 Summit avenue, who was then living at 827 Mound street, Dayton's Bluff. This was Mr. Malmros' last visit to St. Paul, he being appointed, a few months after his arrival here, as consul to France.

Wished to Die Here.

At that time Mr. Malmros expressed a wish to die in St. Paul, and for years had sent money at regular intervals to a local bank for safe keeping and saving against the day he should return here to spend his declining years. Although he owned no property here, it is thought that he left a large amount of money in local banks and deposit vaults.

News regarding the aged consul's death are meager, and it is not known what arrangements will be made for the funeral.

ATTACK FIRE LAWS.

Roads Will Test Legality of Precautionary Rules.

St. Paul.—The railroads of Minnesota will fight the forest fire law enacted by the last legislature, and will make an effort to have the state supreme court declare the law, or parts of it, unconstitutional. The law requires them to have a patrol on every mile of their line through wooded districts during dry seasons, requires them to burn or remove combustible material from their rights of way, and contains various other regulations intended to prevent the setting of fires by locomotives.

Several of the northern roads have been fined recently through prosecutions started by Forestry Commissioner C. C. Andrews. Last Friday the Canadian Northern railroad was fined $50 by Justice Waag, of Roseau, for not having its right of way clear of combustible material. The road gave notice of appeal.

The other roads in the northern part of the state have been fined several times during the summer for failing to have patrols on their lines through the forest country, for failing to have spark arresters, and for other infractions of the law. All of them have refused, however, to pay the fines, and have given notice of appeal. One case is pending at Brainerd against the Northern Pacific for failure to have the required patrols. The hearing in the municipal court last Friday was continued until next Friday.

BANDITS LOOT A BANK.

Safe at Karlstad, Minn., Blown and Robbed of $1,500 in Cash.

Hallock.—The First State Bank of Karlstad, a little town of that name in Kittson county, was broken into by bandits.

The safe was blown open and robbed of $1,500 in cash.

The noise of the explosion aroused the town and the officers at the county seat were notified of the raid. The cracksmen were by this time in full flight.

OLD MAN BITTEN BY DOG.

Stillwater.—In the midst of the active crusade against rabies, William Strake, an aged man, was bitten by a dog belonging to William Fisher, a neighbor.

The dog was chained and will be watched to see if rabies develops. Strake will not be sent to the Pasteur institute. Nearly thirty dogs have been killed by the officials.

UNIVERSITY GETS $60,000.

Thomas H. Shevlin Offers Scholarships.

Minneapolis.—Announcement was made at the meeting of the board of regents of the University that Thomas H. Shevlin offers a donation of $60,000 to the university. The offer was accepted with thanks and enthusiasm.

Of the donation $50,000 is to be devoted to five scholarships, invested and the interest used to help students. The board expressed itself as confident that the five portions could be so invested that the interest on each would be sufficient to pay the expenses of one student.

No Sex Discrimination.

Mr. Shevlin specifies that in selecting students for the scholarship there shall be no bias or discrimination as to sex. The additional $10,000 is to be used to enlarge the dining room of Alice Shevlin hall. Minor conditions were made and Mr. Shevlin is to be consulted on some particulars.

Francis C. Shenehon was appointed dean of the college of engineering, to take the place of Dean Frederick S. Jones. Professor Shenehon has been in charge of the Great Lakes survey for the war department, with headquarters in Washington. He was graduated from the engineering college of the University of Minnesota, in 1895.

Committee on New Dean.

E. G. Quigley was elected assistant professor of the college of education. His subject will be "The Theory of Teaching." Professor John W. Olsen, dean of the college of agriculture, resigned, his resignation to take effect whenever the board of regents find another man for the place. A committee was appointed to find the man. Former Governor John Lind made a short address in connection with the Shevlin gift in which he said that the purpose for which it is given is noteworthy, and the most promising occurrence which the university has experienced in years.

REDWOOD WILL SUE FOR FUND.

Improvement of the Minnesota Hinges Upon Test Case.

St. Peter.—Improvement of the Minnesota river, to which landowners along the valley look for relief from floods that have ruined their crops and damaged their property, hinges upon an action soon to be instituted by the county of Redwood. It will ask the state supreme court for an order compelling the state drainage commission to pay an appropriation on a drainage ditch, and the decision will determine the validity of other river and ditch appropriations.

Session laws of 1907 made special provision for the extension of state aid to assist counties in digging judicial ditches, and under the law Redwood county began the construction of a drainage ditch. The state drainage commission set aside $3,000 to meet the cost of construction, and half the amount was paid over to Redwood county. Before the ditch was completed, however, Attorney General Simpson ruled that ditch construction came under the head of internal improvements, and that it would be unlawful to pay the remainder of the money. The authorities of Redwood county will make a formal demand on the drainage commission for the $1,500, and when it is denied will bring a test case before the supreme court.

This action directly affects the Minnesota river from the fact that the last legislature appropriated $25,000 for the improvement of the head waters, and that other moneys placed at the disposal of the drainage commission were intended to cover the cost of a preliminary survey and of straightening and deepening portions of the channel. Officers of the Minnesota River Improvement league had determined to institute proceedings to obtain these appropriations, but they now will await the outcome of the Redwood county test case.

Moose Calves Cost $50.

Carlos Avery, executive agent of the state fish commission, returned from a trip of several days along the north shore of Lake Superior. He prosecuted one man at Grand Marais for shipping two live moose calves. The man was fined $50.

The calves were shipped to Grasston and were to be used for pets, but Mr. Avery says that this can be done only for scientific purposes and with a permit from the commission. Mr. Avery was told that a number of live moose calves had been caught and shipped.

Insane, Kills Children.

East Grand Forks.—Mrs. Anton Strause, mother of six children, residing at Tabor, ten miles northeast of this city, killed her one-year-old daughter and three-year-old son by chopping off their heads with an ax.

She then ran to the nearest neighbor to borrow a gun to shoot her other four children, who were picking beans with their father in the field.

Insane motive prompted the dead, as the woman had been out of the state asylum only three months.

BIG DRIVE COMING DOWN.

Last, but One, of the Present Year on the Mississippi.

St. Cloud.—A crew of ninety-eight men under the direction of Otis Webb, left the dam here, on their way down the Mississippi, with a large drive of logs. The crew will pick up everything in the timber line in the river. The present stage of the water makes it easy to float the logs and the crew expects little or no trouble from jams. This will be the last drive of the season.

UNCLE SAM NEEDS MONEY

INCREASE IN FEE FOR REGISTRATION OF LETTERS ANNOUNCED.

CONFERENCE TO BE CALLED

Service Will Be Placed on More Businesslike Basis, Is Statement Issued by the Postoffice Department.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 25.—An increase of two cents in the near future in the fee for registration of letters and mail packages was announced today by Postmater General Hitchcock.

His decision followed an extended inquiry into the registry system by a special committee appointed by the postmaster general and with whom he had a long conference today. It was decided to call in a score of registry officials of ripe experience and ability from various parts of the country for a more general meeting with the postmaster general next Monday.

It is understood to be Hitchcock's purpose to take up the registry system first in considering all branches of the postal service for reorganization wherever greater efficiency and less expenditure may be effected. It is thought that the service may be placed on a more business like basis without working undue hardship or imposing unreasonable burdens on the public.

DON'T BE AFRAID, SAYS HILL.

Tells Canadians That American Settlers Are Good People.

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 25.—"Don't be afraid you wont get the people. There is no other place on the American continent where they can go. But don't try to get the people who will have to be re-civilized," said James J. Hill, in speaking for American settlers at Canadian Club today where he and Lord Strathcona, both noted pioneer railroad builders of the northwest were the guests of honor at dinner. The 15,000 people present burst into prolonged applause when the pioneer railroad men clasped hands renewing their old time acquaintance.

Continuing, Mr. Hill said: "It is a long and serious job to assimilate a foreign population. Those who come from our western states speak your language and knew your institutions. I am very sure that they will quite rapidly fall into your local municipal organization. As a rule you can collect judgment from them."

Hill stated that one out of every five persons born in Canada now live in the United States, but that Canada is now getting back to its population rapidly as hundreds of landseekers are now coming in from the western states, having from five to twenty thousand dollars each and they will make as much progress in one year he stated as a European will in ten.

EXPERTS WILL DISAGREE.

Differences Certain to Arise at Meeting of Food and Dairy Experts.

Denver, Colo, Aug. 25.—The contentions of the department of agriculture that benzoate of soda, used as a preservative in thousands of food products, is not harmful to the public health, will be defended here tomorrow by an army of chemical experts at the Convention of the Association of the State and National Food and Dairy Departments.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson was joined here today by Dr. Ira Remsen of Baltimore, Dr. R. H. Chittenden of New Haven, Conn., Dr. John H. Long of Evanston, Ill., and Dr. C. H. Herter of New York City, all the members of the Remsen referee board, which was created by President Roosevelt in the latter part of his administration, to decide upon the disputed points in the enforcement of the federal pure food laws.

They will appear before the convention to defend their findings that benzoate of soda is not harmful when used in small suantities.

THREATEN TO SHOOT EMPLOYES.

Peoria, Ill., Aug. 25.—Fishermen are patrolling the entrance to Spring Lake from the Illinois River with shot-guns and threaten to shoot employes of the federal dredging company if the work of closing the dredge ditch begun by the state several days ago is not stopped.

HAYRACK RIDE ENDS IN DEATH.

Fort Dodge, Iowa, Aug. 25.—Two children were killed and fifteen injured at Humboldt this afternoon, several of them seriously, when a hayrack, carrying a Methodist Sunday school picnic, was overturned, hurling the children down a seven foot embankment.

The dead are:

Almeda Wilder, aged 12.

Ruth Faucett, aged 16.

While stopping at the bottom of a hill, the horses backed up and the rack overturned.

TAFT FAVORS POSTAL BANKS.

Beverly, Mass., Aug. 25.—President Taft indicated to the callers today that in his message to congress next December, he will strongly urge the early establishment of the postal savings banks system.

The president realizes that there is strong opposition to such legislation at this time and while he does not propose to rush congress on too many matters at once, he will ask that the platform declaration of the republication party in favor of postal savings banks be fulfilled.

The Auto Strop.

When the train stopped at the little Southern station the Northern tourist sauntered out on the platform. Under a scrub oak stood a lean animal with scraggy bristles. The tourist was interested.

"What do you call that?" he queried of a lanky native.

"Razorback hawg."

"Well, what is he doing rubbing against that tree?"

"He's stropping himself, mister, jest stropping himself."

Putting It Delicately.

Author—Have you read my new book?

Friend—Yes.

"What do you think of it?"

"Well, to be candid with you, I think the covers are too far apart."

His Logic.

Knicker—Women will get the ballot when the majority ask for it.

Mrs. Knicker—Do men get their buttons sewed on when the majority of them ask for it?

The NEW DIVORCE CENTRE

Reno, Nevada, Inherits the Sioux Falls Industry

A Million a Year Estimated Revenue

By HERBERT F. JACKSON

JUDGE ORR, WHO DECIDES HALF OF THE DIVORCE SUITS

JUDGE PIKE, WHO DECIDES HALF OF THE DIVORCE SUITS

RENO, Nev.—The population and social life of Reno, Nev., are undergoing a great change. Where a year or so ago the optimistic mining promoter, in his corduroy or khaki and his high russet shoes, was wont to disport himself, to-day may be seen men of the east flashing by in high-powered automobiles. Where Washoe squaws would a year ago sit and play cards at the corners of the public squares may be seen to-day handsome women in Paris gowns sauntering in the afternoon sun. On the veranda of the leading hotel where a year ago were the silence and desolation that the panic of 1907 produced, idly sit and fight with ennui groups of men and women, who look forward, in mental vision, to the time when they will be able to forsake this frontier post of civilization and whirl an eager flight back to their homes in the east.

But they are looking for divorces at present, and so they must stay here for at least six months from date of arrival to satisfy the requirements of the Nevada divorce laws with regard to residence. For Reno has succeeded to the eminence formerly occupied by Sioux Falls as the divorce center of America. Some farsighted lawyer got into the Nevada legislature several years ago, and when he got out again there was a divorce law among the statutes of Nevada that for length, breadth, height, elasticity, and all other qualities that commend themselves to the seeker after easy matrimonial freedom, could not be surpassed anywhere in the union. It was equaled by the South Dakota law, though, and so Nevada and the Nevada lawyer secured no results from it for the time being.

But everything comes to him that waits, and when the people of South Dakota arose in their wrath last November and, by a referendum vote, declared that any one who desired to get a divorce in South Dakota would have to live there a year instead of six months, as had been the requirement previously, the seeker of relief from present matrimonial ties began to take the long journey westward to Nevada, where it takes but a six months' residence to be in a position to go before the courts of the state as plaintiff in a divorce suit.

W. H. Schnitzer, a Reno divorce specialist, has written a treatise on divorce practice and procedure, in which he throws an illuminating ray on the wherefore of the popularity of Reno as a divorce center. He says:

"While the laws of the eastern and middle western states generally contain some provision for the dissolution of the marriage tie, it is obvious to the reader that in cases where extreme cruelty, desertion, and failure to provide form the basis of the grievance, the law in such states offers no substantial relief to the aggrieved party, because the requirements of proof, duration of offense, corroboration of plaintiff and procedure under court rules are so exacting and irksome that the desired relief sought by the applicant is rendered impossible of attainment. Summing up the situation as it exists in the eastern states respecting the domestic relation law, the client when consulting local counsel is almost invariably advised that upon the facts submitted he or she is without remedy. Here in Nevada the applicant, without deception or fraud, upon almost any charge from which lack of harmonious relations may be reasonably inferred, may apply to our courts and secure prompt results by decree of absolute divorce, valid and binding in law."

While there are about 54 cases now on the docket of the district court, there are in Reno to-day over 350 individuals establishing a residence for divorce purposes, a majority of whom are women.

The charms of Nevada as a divorce center have only just begun to percolate into the consciousness of the outside world.

Reno has no objection to the present status of affairs. It is estimated that the revenue of the town from the divorce colony at present is close to $1,000,000 a year, and that it will rapidly increase from this on. To a community of but 18,000 population this is no small consideration.

Why Reno is preferred to any other community in the state as a place of residence by those seeking divorces is because of the manifold advantages of the town over any other in the state. Nevada is primarily a mining state, and nature usually hides her precious metals in difficult places. Reno is not a mining camp, and is not only centrally situated from a railroad point of view, but has scenic attractions rarely to be found in any American community.

It is located in the heart of a rich agricultural region, and through the center of the town runs a beautiful mountain stream, the Truckee river. Surrounding the town, at a brief distance, are snow-capped mountains, and the winds coming from over their summits keep the air cool on summer nights. It is never very warm in Reno. On the other hand, the winters are comparatively mild.

An altitude of 4,500 feet makes the atmosphere somewhat trying on nerves that are not robust to begin with, but nervous affections are the only complaints to which the climate is unfavorable.

For the cure of other ailments hot mineral water springs abound in the vicinity of Reno. Twelve miles away are the famous Steamboat Springs which Comstock millionaires were wont to patronize 40 years ago. Three miles from Reno is Moana Springs. Five miles from Reno, to the west, is another famous medicinal resort, Laughton's Springs, the road to which runs along the Truckee river, making a beautiful driving boulevard. Half way to Laughton's on this road is a magnificent edifice known as "Rick's," which is the local "Monte Carlo." Rick's has all the conveniences for those who desire to make a stay, and frequently parties who go there to spend a few hours forget to come back for several days. It might be mentioned in this connection that the divorce colony has brought to Reno over 100 motor cars.

RENO'S LEADING RESTAURANT—A RENDEZVOUS FOR DIVORCE SEEKERS

RENO'S MAIN BUSINESS STREET

The leading hotels are always crowded, and the rents for cottages have appreciated, on the average, to the extent of 60 per cent. in the last six months. In some instances the increase has been much greater. One cottage that rented for $60 a month in January last, now returns its owner a rental of $100 a month.

Perhaps the one thing that endears Reno to the visiting divorcee more than anything else is its proximity to San Francisco. One may board a train in Reno and be in the Pacific coast metropolis in ten hours. Despite its manifold attractions, life in Reno is likely to wear irksome upon those who have been used to existence in larger centers, and the visitors, to a great extent, sooner or later during their stay, take a trip or half a dozen trips over the Sierras to the city by the Golden Gate.

Such visits, while affording relief from the monotony of life in Reno, do not impair the residence qualifications necessary to the obtaining of a divorce. To again quote the Nevada divorce authority already mentioned:

"Under the provisions of Section 22 of the Marriage and Divorce act, the plaintiff must reside in the state for a period of at least six months. This is not construed to mean that in order to fully comply with the statute the party must remain here continuously for said period. So, if a party comes to Nevada, and, in good faith, takes up a residence, the party may leave the state at any time after establishing residence, may go and travel when and wherever the party chooses, and may return to the state whenever inclination prompts, and yet such temporary absence would not in any wise affect the legality of the residence established, but the party would be entitled under the law to bring suit any time after the lapse of six months from the date residence was originally established, notwithstanding the party's absence from the state during said period."

Biased somewhat by the financial seductions of the situation, and yet to learn the lesson that such a state of affairs can only result in the moral degradation of the youth of the community—a lesson which caused South Dakota to reform her divorce laws—Reno appears to be perfectly contented with things as they are.

But Reno is busily engaged in cleaning house, and it is felt by the most reflective observers that the divorce laws of Nevada as now written will be a thing of the past in the near future. Not in the very near future—for the next legislature does not meet until January of 1911. There are others who point to the experience of South Dakota, which for 20 years fought the evils of lax divorce laws before a repeal was secured, and say that the moralists of Nevada have an equally stubborn task before them. But Nevada is cleaning house. In the last session of the legislature, after gaming being permitted for 40 years with cognizance of law, a bill abolishing gambling was passed—the act to take effect in November of 1910—and it is believed that if that could be done, the slack divorce laws can be more easily repealed.

In the meantime the hotel men and cottage renters of Reno and the divorce lawyers will continue to flourish. Parisian toilettes and 60 horse-power automobiles will flash and dart through the quiet thoroughfares at all sorts of hours. Men and women will continue to become "citizens" of Nevada on a six-months' residence—and leave the state forever the day after securing their divorce decrees.

Frolics of a Real Queen

That queens are very human beings after all is evidenced by their delight in the outdoor pleasures which even their humblest subjects may enjoy. The royal lady of a European court no longer sits in regal splendor in her palace, surrounded by ladies in waiting ready to minister to her most languid wish, but you may meet her motoring in the country or riding horseback in the park. It is an excellent example they are setting for their countrywomen in this respect.

Queen Alexandra is a devotee of outdoor life. Indeed, she attributes keeping young and enjoying good health to this fact. When a young girl she was fond of swimming, rowing and driving, and even now she never permits a day to go by without taking some exercise. If the weather is too bad for walking she passes several hours at billiards. She is wonderfully skilled with the cue and is proud of her game. But in nice weather her favorite exercise is walking. At Sandringham she visits all parts of her farm at least once a day. This is more of a pleasure than a task, because she usually amuses herself on the way by taking snapshots with her camera or playing with one or more dogs. Fond though the queen is of outdoor life, she avoids hard exercise. Yachting and driving she enjoys, but she never has played golf or put a ball over a tennis net.

Persistent automobiling, she believes, offers the quickest means known for getting rid of a nice complexion and gaining 10,000 wrinkles.

Queen Alexandra believes so much in fresh air and exercise out of doors that she has sometimes slept in a tent she had put up for her at Sandringham. Once, asked how she managed to keep young, she said: "Fresh air and exercise are the best elixirs of youth."

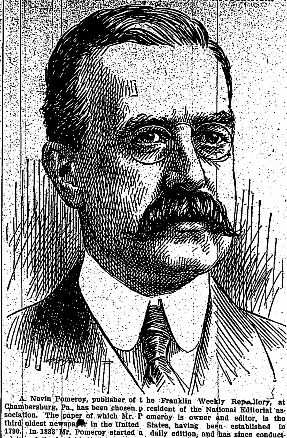
Queen Alexandra's particular hobby is photography and that takes her out of doors a great deal. She is said now to possess albums containing over 10,000 photographs, all taken by her own hands, representing royal and important personages, places and festivals in all parts of Europe. For a period of 16 years now the queen has been a devotee of the camera. She possesses five cameras.

Wherever the queen goes—be it a cruise in the royal yacht, to her home in Denmark, or a ride across country in the Highlands—she is never without her camera. That she uses it well is evident when it is stated that during one of her Mediterranean cruises she secured 1,400 photographs in six weeks. Then it is very seldom, too, that the queen throws out a picture or destroys a negative because the subject is not up to the mark.

In her way of going to work she is most methodical. Her photographs fill many albums and under each photograph her majesty has written a description of the picture and the date when taken. They include a great variety of subjects, from the king's stud horses taken in the old days at the annual sale at Wolferton to portraits of her grandchildren on the lawn at Sandringham and the ruins of the Parthenon. The photographs of her grandchildren fill three albums alone and now amount to several thousand. They depict them at their games, romping with each other, and one, that made the king roar with laughter when he saw it, has caught two of the younger sons of the Princess of Wales, each endeavoring to exert his right to a certain toy by the free use of his fists.

What she regards as one of her best photographs of the king is that which depicts him talking to Lord Suffield in the grounds of Marlborough house.

PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION.



A. Nevin Pomeroy, publisher of the Franklin Weekly Repository, at Chambersburg, Pa., has been chosen president of the National Editorial association. The paper of which Mr. Pomeroy is owner and editor, is the third oldest newspaper in the United States, having been established in 1790. In 1883 Mr. Pomeroy started a daily edition, and has since conducted it and the book-binding and job printing plant. Mr. Pomeroy was born in Philadelphia and has been engaged in newspaper work in Pennsylvania for 35 years. He was appointed state superintendent of public printing in 1893 and reappointed this year. He has served several terms in the Pennsylvania legislature, was elected second vice-president of the National Editorial association at Jamestown, two years ago, and first vice-president at St. Paul, last year. He has been a member of the association for 17 years and has attended 14 of its annual meetings.

RUST-PROOF WHEAT

Scientists in Race to Grow Perfect Grain of All Kinds.

Cambridge School Produces Variety That Resists Disease and Is Very Strong—French Hybridizers Secure Heavy Yield.

London.—Scientific men at Cambridge who are devoting themselves to agricultural research are on the eve of establishing a proud claim made a year ago. They said that they would increase the value of wheat crops by $10 an acre.

But in the race for the perfect grain—wheat, barley and oats—they are being pressed hard by other discoverers who are total disbelievers in the Cambridge methods, and the race for the perfect grain under the different methods is becoming exciting.

The chief competitors of Mr. Biffen, Mr. Punnett and the Cambridge school are M. Vilmorin of Paris, Mr. Burbank, who is called the California wizard, and John Garton of Warrington.

John Garton and Mr. Burbank have exchanged letters, and agree that the making of the perfect grain is more or less a fluke. Mr. Garton, for example, produced an oat which increased the yield by ten to 20 per cent., and grew a large grain by using the wild oat, which has the smallest of all grain and was thought to be useless.

Mr. Biffen, on the other hand, works wholly by system, and has two triumphs to his credit. He has produced a wheat absolutely proof against rust, which is the most prevalent of wheat diseases, and he has been able, by following the law of Mendel, to fix these new sorts in two or three years where previously the work took eight or ten. These disease-proof wheats will be available for next harvest, and their creation has greatly excited men of science all over the world.

The present position in the race is this, that the Cambridge school has produced grains which resist disease and are very "strong"—that is, are good for milling. The French hybridizers and Mr. Garton have produced grains remarkable for heavy yield.

The achievement which is yet to come is the joining together of the disease resisters and the heavy yielders. When that is done the farmer's fortune is made, if wheat will stay near its present price.

Look of Policeman Kills.

New York.—A runaway horse belonging to John H. Ferrill, a coal dealer of Rockaway Beach, looked Police Captain Brown of the Richmond Hill station in the eye the other morning and dropped dead.

"I heard a noise in the back yard," said the captain. "So I went down stairs in my pajamas and looked into the yard, and there was a horse frisking its tail and kicked up its heels.

"I yelled, 'Hey there!' and the horse looked at me and dropped dead. I don't see what's funny about that. The horse dropped dead, that's all."

BOYS BUTTON DRESS

Custom Inaugurated When One Husband Injured His Hand.

Messengers Called Upon Frequently in London Because Gowns Are So Expensive, Many Women Cannot Afford to Keep Maids.

London.—To many strange and unusual tasks have the boys of the district messenger service been put.

They will carry your messages, guide you across London, look after school boys and girls crossing town on their way to or from school, or go round the world for you—and all in answer to a simple telephone call. They are ubiquitous, capable, ready for anything.

But their latest achievement, and surely the most unusual, is to act as ladies' maids.

The other afternoon an excited man rushed into a district messenger office. "Can you send a boy at once to lace up a lady's dress," he asked, apparently in despair and obviously expecting to be met with a scornful refusal.

"Certainly, sir," was the calm answer. "What address?" The address was duly given, and the harassed man walked off mopping his brow.

"I told the man in charge I had heard they could send boys to do anything," he said afterwards, "but I thought that would be too much for them, but not a bit of it."

"I was in a horrible fix. My wife's maid was taken suddenly ill, and we had an important function that night, and I could not find a maid at such short notice. My wife's dress buttons or laces up the back—I don't know which. I have hurt my fingers, and cannot help her, and she cannot do it herself, and there are no other servants in the house."

Later the lady who had been "buttoned up" and the boy were interviewed. Said the lady:

"He was as quick and light fingered as my own maid. My dress is a particularly awkward one to fasten, too, but in less than a minute he had got the hooks and eyes to meet, and a glance at myself in the glass assured me that I was perfectly dressed.

"The boy declared he had never done a job like this before, but I can hardly believe it. Afterwards, just to try him, I made him take down some of my skirts from a cupboard and fold them ready for packing. He did it beautifully."

The boy, a fresh-faced youngster of about 14, said he had never done this particular job before.

"But often we get curious jobs, which we know very little about," he said. "We soon get used to using our brains and fingers on any emergency that may crop up."

Inquiries elucidated the fact that this is not an isolated instance of a boy acting as lady's maid.

A lady a few days ago, in much the same circumstances, arranged that a boy should be at her house at 6 p. m. to "button her up" at the back, and again at 11 p. m. to unbutton her.

The fashion of dresses which button at the back, where no woman can possibly reach herself, and the increased cost of living, which has induced many people who hitherto had handmaids to endeavor to do without them, has been responsible for this.

MONKEYS MARRIED IN FORM

Logansport, Ind. — James Reid, whose title of marrying 'squire was gained after he had married 400 couples within four years, the other night officiated at the "wedding" of Julia Kruger and Master Tony, chimpanzees owned by August Lambrigger, a banker of Orville, Ohio.

With the same solemn words that accompany the justice's usual wedding ceremony, in the presence of more than 200 people, Master Tony took for his bride a tiny monkey. The marriage license, which bears the name of Edward Hankee, clerk of the Cass circuit court, shows the bridegroom to be two years old and the bride only a year. The license shows her a daughter of Oom Paul of Palapye, Africa.

'Squire Reid was late in appearing, and Master Tony, who had seen his bride-to-be for the first time earlier in the day, showed both teeth and disapproval before the marrying 'squire appeared. Then it was found that there was no one present to give the bride away. Chief of Police Vincent Skelton volunteered.

"Do you take Master Tony to be your lawful husband, to love and obey?" asked 'Squire Reid. With proper prodding from the police chief the young "bride" chattered something which the guests took to be assent.

"And do you take Miss Julia Kruger to be your wife, to cherish and protect, so long as you both may live?"

Tony's answer was much more audible than that of many human bridegrooms.

"Then I pronounce you man and wife," announced Reid, and pocketed $5 tendered by Banker Lambrigger.

Then the rice throwing began, with more practical results than usual, as it provided a wedding banquet. The monkeys gathered up all the rice they could find and ate it.

Master Tony is a widower, Sod, or rather Ashes, his former mate having been cremated several months ago at Orville. The ashes of his former mate are kept by Lambrigger at his home in a funeral urn.

WOULD LIVE WITHOUT EATING

Shelbyville Man with Odd Theories Is Locked Up as Insane After Clever Ruse.

Shelbyville, Ind.—Believing that he could live without eating, that his mouth had grown shut, and that he could live 1,000 years, caused a sanitary commission to hold an inquiry into the mental condition of Charles Watkins, and they declared that he was a person of unsound mind.

Being a friend of Sheriff Butler's, he was asked to go to the jail to fix a lock on one of the cells. He consented, and as he passed through the jail door to the cell the door closed on him and he will remain there until papers arrive to take him to the insane hospital. He was born and reared here, and for many wears was a member of the local fire department.

Flea Has Eyes, But Can't See.

Berkeley, Cal.—Following a series of exhaustive experiments with the California flea, Prof. C. W. Woodworth of the University of California announced to-day that although that insect has eyes it does not see. To be more exact, the professor stated that the flea merely sees a variation of the rays of light when near an object.

BRITAIN MAY SEND A FLEET

Squadron of Battleships Be Sent to San Francisco to Participate in Festivities.

London.—That the British government will not only send one battleship, but probably a squadron of battleships to participate in the festivities in San Francisco harbor during the week of October 19, is the encouraging information just given to Charles A. Moore of San Francisco by First Lord of the Admiralty McKenna. Lord McKenna said:

"We feel that the feat accomplished in rebuilding San Francisco is typical of the spirit charactering the Anglo-Saxon race, and as such should arouse pride in every Briton as well as in all Americans. Consequently not only do we want to send a ship as evidence that we share in the pride, but if possible, we are likely to send a whole squadron. Circumstances make it impossible for me to say offhand whether we shall be able to send a squadron, for we couldn't transfer the Atlantic squadron to the Pacific in time for the celebration, and we have nothing on the Pacific coast adequately to represent us. We want to send our best battleships and not armored cruisers."

There is good reason to believe that Lord McKenna cabled the British China station as to the expediency of sending a battleship squadron across the Pacific from the far east.

Bar "Blue Eye" Corn.

Evansville, Ind.—Grain dealers of this city have been warned by Nashville (Tenn.) millers against further shipments of "blue eye" corn from this territory, it being alleged that to this peculiar blight in corn is due a disease of the human skin which has been worrying Tennessee physicians for some time. The "blue eye" is due to a combination of warmth and wetness in the last ripening stage, it is said, producing a fermentation which affects users of the corn products. Practically all of southern Indiana's corn is shipped to Tennessee. [illegible]

Must Waltz 60 to Minute.

Schevengingen, Holland.—At the second congress of the International Union of Dance Teachers, held here, it was unanimously resolved, on the motion of R. M. Crompton, president of the Imperial society of Dance Teachers (England), that the universal tempo for performing waltz music for dancing will be 60 beats to the minute.

Painted Catfish Sold in Manchester.

London.—At a meeting at Leeds, W. F. Dearden, medical officer of the port of Manchester, said fraudulent trade descriptions were extremely common. He made the startling announcement that tons of "painted" catfish were put on the market and sold as finnon haddocks.

Named for Roosevelt.

Baton Rouge, La.—A railroad in Louisiana has been named for Theodore Roosevelt. It is the Roosevelt & Western and is seven miles long, extending from a point on the main line of the Memphis, Helena & Louisiana to Shields, La.

Best Known of All Coins

United States Cent Well Described as the Universal Money of the People.

The universal money of the people in this country is the cent. The child does his earliest business thinking in terms of cents. The hobo holds up the passerby with the request for a few cents to relieve the pangs of hunger. It is the unit of coinage. On the other side of the continent the [illegible] contempt for it is rapidly being overcome and the mints have to take a constantly increasing demand for it into their reckonings. The appearance of the new Lincoln cent is one of the most interesting additions to this coinage that has been produced. For practically the first time it substitutes the real for the ideal or, rather, the fanciful; but it is evidently regarded as something of an experiment, since the proposed 150,000 [illegible] toward supplying current needs.

Perhaps no other monetary denomination has undergone so many changes of design. Since the republic was born there have been almost annual changes in the character of the cent. Most of these have been trivial, though some have been radical. The cent of 1792 bore a bust of Liberty with flowing hair and the legend, "Liberty, Parent of Science and Industry." The next year what was known as the "chain cent" was produced, showing on the reverse a chain with 15 links. There were many imperfect dies in those days, but the imperfections have not infrequently made them precious to coin collectors. A genuine 1799 cent has been among the pieces most prized by the numismatist, since they early became very scarce. This was said to be due to the enterprise of a Salem firm that secured several hundred thousand of them and sent them to the coast of Africa, where, punched with holes, they were hung as ornaments on the necks of the natives. Next Monday is Labor day, an event of vast importance in the larger cities.

The best story of the season is that being turned out by the threshing machine.

Big crops are splendid ameliorators, and the Red River Valley is in the state of mind to forget its little troubles.

The newspaper boys are booming Sam Gorden of Browns Valley for lieutenant governor. Sam would give the state splendid service, but isn't the kind of man the interests are looking for.

President Taft has issued an order prohibiting census enumerators from meddling in politics. To insure observance of this rule the president should see that the enumerators are selected by reason of merit rather than political affiliation.

The board of regents has accepted John W. Olson's resignation as dean of the agricultural school, and it is expected that his successor will be selected soon. Mr. Olsen has had a long and honorable educational career, and has made good" in every capacity.

In New York, according to the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, a recent study showed that there were more than 25,000 tuberculous children in the public schools. On the basis of these and other investigations, it is estimated by certain authorities that there are nearly one million school children in the United States today who will probably die of tuberculosis before they have reached the age of 13. This would mean that the public is paying annually about $7,500,000 for the education of children who will never have opportunity to put that education to practical use. This, we are informed, is "wasted education." Perhaps so, but in view of the fact that tuberculosis is preventable, it seems to be better classed as unjustifiable homicide.

Ornsby McHarg, assistant secretary of commerce and labor, rushes to Secretary Ballinger's defense and in a single interview makes ducks and drakes of the Roosevelt policies. Ormsby received his political education as an office clerk for Senator McCumber, and undoubtedly imbibed a great deal of knowledge from that fountain of wisdom, but he's hardly big enough to tackle Theodore Roosevelt single-handed.

Hon. William J. Bryan is not going to live in Texas. Mr. Bryan says:

"I have been annoyed by questions of this sort ever since I bought a little farm in Texas. I will make a winter home there perhaps, but positively have no intention of leaving Lincoln or Nebraska. I think this statement should settle the matter, I am a fixture in Nebraska."

The republican party has been busy for some years in making Mr. Bryan "A fixture in Nebraska."

A magazine writer has an article on 'Who Owns America?" We have a right to assume this to be a direct slap at Uncle Rockefeller.

John D. Rockefeller is on the road to be the first billionaire in all history, says the St. Cloud Times. It is said that if he will live to his eightieth birthday, and he thinks he is going to live longer than that, his wealth will reach that stupendous sum. In the last two year it is estimated that the wonderful money making machine of the Standard Oil company which he created has increased his wealth $80,000,000. His fortune is believed to amount to $700,000,000 now. Some of his close associates have figured it that his income is $30.25 a minute.

JOHNSON'S ADVANTAGE.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, one of the ablest as well as most independent and conserative journals in the country, says:

"Gov. Johnson of Minesota had his opportunity at the exposition in Seattle to take advantage of the national attention as it is focused upon the tariff bill, and spoke words that will not injure his aspiration for the Democratic presidential nomination. Next to William J. Bryan, who is always at the front, Gov. Johnson stands foremost as a figure in his party. It is an obvious advantage that he is not mixed up with the situation in Washington and so is free to speak his mind and appeal to the voters of the west against the influence of the east now on exhibition. John A. Johnson is bent upon carrying the next Democratic national convention, he has friends ready to spend money to advance his cause, and he has proved himself a capable politician, if not something better and higher. It is possible that Gov. Johnson might be able to unite the differing factions of the Democracy, in case the friendly offices of Col. Bryan could be secured, but the probability of such favor is not yet apparent."

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Walker Pilot: The Democrats say they are going to run Roosevelt for president in 1912. We doubt if the Republican elephant will kneel for this and let Teddy off.

Hinckley Enterprise: Jim Tawney is reported as saying that the only place he heard of the public demanding any more tariff revision is in St. Paul. Jim had better get his ear closer to the ground.

Paynesville Press: Governor Johnson or an other Democrat has nothing to fear from the Republican party until Dar Reese and a few more has-beens like him die off or go where they belong—within the Democratic party.

Le Sueur News: It takes a red-nosed man, with a greasy vest, a soiled collar, a cheap cigar, with his feet stretched over to the other chair to properly emphasize these words: "These women reformers make me weary."

Monticello Times: Thanks to the new increased tariff for the bountiful crop which is being harvested. For the timely rains, the heat of the sun, and the absence of cyclones, great credit should be given to the Taft-Aldrich-Cannon tariff.

Perham Enterprise: The West gave Governor Johnson the same hearty, enthusiastic reception that has been accorded in other parts of the United States which he has visited. A man must have mertis in order to win such unusual recognition.

Cannon Falls Beacon: It must be that judicial temperament about which we have heard so much that restrains the president from breakng the official neck of the man Ballinger, whose mission in the cabinet seems to be to undo the work of Roosevelt and to hand over the nation's water rights to the corporations. These superjudicial minds do some queer stunts.

Princeton Union: Speaker Cannon appears to enjoy the breathings of the American Press and, notwithstanding the display of antagonism, feels cock-sure that if he lives he will succeed himself in the chair of dictatorialogy at the next term of congress. Joe doesn't care a continental whether the majority of the American people are opposed to him or not so long as the Eighteenth district of Illinois continues to elect him and he can coerce the majority of the house members to give him their votes.

Foley Independent: We do not profess to be sufficiently well acquainted with the doings of Secretary of Interior Ballinger to express an opinion one way or the other on his conduct of affairs since taking Mr. Garfield's place but this much we do know: Water power is the power of the future and he should do everthing in his power to conserve the people's rights along that line. President Taft will be held equally responsible with him for any injudicious bestowals of dam-sites and the Amerian people will resent any attempt on the part of the administration to play them false.

Pointed Paragraphs.

New York Press: An innocent girl is too innocent to know it.

If an automobile breaks down under a girl's window she will believe it was a serenade on a guitar.

No matter in what order they are born a woman can get to be younger than her brothers if they live long enough.

taken to present. The sufficient reason for all these is that they will attract the crowds to the grand stand at night, and thus help to swell the receipts. Many people think it beneath the dignity of the state to go into the hippodome business; and that if it were less anixous to part the people from their money and more zealous to encourage rivalry in the production of what is best in the farm or in the workshop the educational purposes for which the fair as instituted could be better served.

No Soap in Theirs.

The agents of supply houses find their customary methods of securing orders ineffective at the State Banking department. That department was recently in the market for stationery supplies, and a salesman concluded it would be a good stroke of business to get on the right side of their prospective customers by presenting them with a testimonial of regard. This took the form of fountain pens, one of which, including one mounted in silver for Mr. Galarneault, was presented to each member of the office force. "Nice pens those," remared Mr. Galarneault, "where's the bill for them?" "Oh, that's all right" was the reply. Those are for your personal use with the firm's compliments." "We don't do business that way," quickly remarked Mr. Galarneault. "I guess you'd better fetch the bill along the next time you drop in." The salesman, surprised though he was to find a public official unwilling to accept so trifling a favor, put the best countenance on it he could, and the pens were paid for in due course. He didn't get the stationery order, however. That salesmen ingratitate themselves frequently by similar methods no doubt accounts for the long prices the state is sometimes called upon to pay. It is said in business circles that purchasing agents for large houses sometimes cultivate to their profit friendly relations with the agents of supply houses in the manner suggested by this incident.

The Demonstration a Fizzle.

After all the fuss the people of the state are not going to be afforded an opportunity to publicly express their appreciation of the action of those of their representatives who voted against the Payne-Aldrich bill. The politicians took the matter in hand and balked the badly managed movement. They have made up their minds that insurgency is not a thing to be countenanced, much less rewarded. What the public thinks about the Payne bill is no matter. Party discipline must be maintained, and the Republican organization must stand by Republican policies as evidenced by Republican enactments.

The Machine Backs the Payne Bill.

The fact of the matter is that the attempt to recognize popular sentiment against the Payne bill has met with practically no response from the Repubilcan politicians. The original meeting in St. Paul to make arrangements for the demonstration, which was advertised as a gathering of representative citizens was composed, so I am told, of just five men, among whom Eli Warner, who, on account of his affiliations, is regarded as Mr. Clapp's personal representative, was prominent. Few as they were they assumed the authority to take the initiative and appointed a committee to take charge of the demonstartion five men from each congressional district, or fory-five in all. Of these twenty-one, or a minority, expressed themselves by letter in favor of making the demonstraton. In the meantime the organizaton leaders got busy with the result that when the preliminary meeting was held there Thursday afternoon only seven attended. Of these seven three were outspoken aganist the demonstration, and one was a Democrat.

Tawney's Fine Italian Hand.

Naturally Mr. Tawney's hand was seen. The two men in the meeting who took the initiative in balkng its purpose were thick and thin Tawney men, Furlong of Austin and Stebbins of Rochester. Mr. Tawney himself was on the ground to see that things went right. A motion to test the sentiment of the meeting that a demonstration be held was made by Senator Johnson of St. Peter. It was actively opposed by Furlong, Stebbens and Walther of St. Paul. In the face of such opposition, and of the point made that no quorum was present, it at once became plain that nothing could be done. Dare, of Elk River, who favored the demonstration, was the first to weaken. Peck of Shakopee, the lone Democrat, threw down his hand. This left Halbert of St. Paul and Johnson of St. Peter alone in urging the recognition of the action of the insurgents. They didn't dare let a vote be taken. The best they could do was to secure permission to take a referendum vote of those members of the committee not present to see whether they would go any further with the matter. This is regarded here as a practical abondonment of the demonstration and complete victory for the organization Republicans.

The Clapp Maneurers.

The attitude of the Clapp people all along has been peculiar. Although they welcomed the movement at first as in his interest, when they found the machine was against it they began to scuttle. Public sentiment is well enough in its way and its all right to court the approval of the people; but when the Clapp boosters had to choose between the voters and the machine they choose the machine. Nor is this surprising. It was to the organization that Senator Clapp owed his election in the first place. It was adroit political maneuvering that compassed his re-election and his friends now feel that to turn his back on the organization which had done so much for him and rely solely on a fickle populace would be mighty poor politics. Hence when it came to a showdown Charlie Haupt, Bill Rich and the rest of the office holding crowd dropped like a hot brick the movement which at first they had favored and it is not too much to anticipate that before the next campaign comes to an end they will be found apologizing because Senator Clapp felt compelled in order to put himself right with the people at home to oppose the policy and the tariff law upon which the president had set the seal of his approval.

Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively, not one weak heart in a hundred is, in itself, actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden tiny little nerve that really is all at fault. This obscure nerve—the Cardiac, or Heart Nerve—simply needs, and must have, more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have these same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to these weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds; it strengthens; it offers real, genuine heart help.

If you would have strong Hearts, strong digestion, strengthen these nerves—re-establish them as needed, with

S.S.S. HEALS OLD SORES

No old sore exists merely because the flesh is diseased at that particular spot; if this were true simple cleanliness and local applications would heal them. Whenever a sore or ulcer refuses to heal readily, the blood is at fault; this vital fluid is filled with impurities and poisons which are being constantly discharged into the place, feeding it with noxious matter and irritating and inflaming the nerves and tissues so the sore cannot heal. These impurities in the blood may be the remains of some constitutional trouble, the effect of a debilitating spell of sickness, leaving disease germs in the system, or the absorption by the blood of the fermented refuse matter which the bodily channels of waste have failed to remove. Again the cause may be hereditary, the diseased blood of ancestry being handed down to posterity; but whatever the cause, the fact that the sore will not heal shows the necessity for the very best constitutional treatment. There is nothing that causes more worry and anxiety than an old sore which resists treatment. Every symptom suggests pollution and disease—the discharge, the red, angry looking flesh, the pain and inflammation, and the discoloration of surrounding parts; all show that deep down in the blood there are morbid and dangerous forces at work, constantly creating poisons which may in the end lead to Cancer. Local applications are valuable only for their cleansing and antiseptic effects; they do not reach the blood, where the real cause is located, and can therefore have no real curative worth. S. S. S. heals old sores by going down to the fountain-head of the trouble and driving out the poison-producing germs and morbid matters which are keeping the ulcer open. It removes every particle of impurity from the circulation and makes this life-stream pure, fresh and health-sustaining. Then as new, rich blood is carried to the place the healing begins, all discharge ceases, the inflammation leaves, new tissue and healthy flesh are formed, and soon the sore or ulcer is well. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers and finest of tonics, just what is needed in the treatment, and in addition to curing the sore will build up and strengthen every part of the system. Special book on Sores and Ulcers and any medical advice desired furnished free to all who write. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

I want to recommend S. S. S. to any who are in need of a blood purifier, and especially as a remedy for sores and obstinate ulcers. In 1877 I had my leg badly cut on the sharp edge of a barrel, and having on a blue woolen stocking the place was badly poisoned from the dye. A great sore formed and for years no one knows what I suffered with the place. I tried, it seemed to me, everything I had ever heard of, but I got no relief and I thought I would have to go through life with an angry, discharging sore on my leg. At last I began the use of S. S. S., and it was but a short time until I saw that the place was improving. I continued it until it removed all the poison from my blood and made a complete and permanent cure of the sore. JNO. ELLIS.

The Restorative reaches out for the actual cause of these ailments—the failing "inside nerves." Anyway test the Restorative 48 hours. Another Land Opening.

The Carey Land Act Board of the state of Montana has authorized the opening of 70,000 acres of land near Conrad, Montana, in Teton county. These lands are under the canals and irrigation system of the Conrad &Water Company, which has entered into a contract with the state for the reclamation and settlement thereof. In the sale of these lands a plan similar to the one adopted by the government in the opening of Indian Resevation lands will be followed. The dates of registration are October 1st to 16th, inclusive. The drawing takes place October 7th. The "Carey Act" is one of the most liberal laws under which to acquire homestead land. The method of entering upon these lands is governed by acts of Congress and provisions of the laws of Montana under the "Carey Act." Not more than 160 acres may be entered by one person who must be twenty-one years of age and a citizen of the United States, or one who has declared his intention to become a citizen. Title to "Carey Act" lands can be secured by thirty days actual residence upon the land and the cultivation of one-eighth of the tract. The railroads are making special rates for this opening and it is expected that 20,000 people will register.

TWENTY MILLION DOLLARS A SEASON FOR FUN

FROM time to time magazines and newspapers have printed stories dealing with the amount of money expended by the public in its search for amusements, and the aggregate in dollars, running well up toward $20,000,000 for a single season's theater-going, is a fairly reasonable estimate. What it costs to provide these theatrical amusements for a year, a month, a week, or even a day, is a subject, however, of such indefinite conjecture that it has not yet got into type, or, if it has, in such a desultory and fragmentary way, and with so much omitted and so much taken for granted, that the figures cannot be said to have carried much conviction. It is practically impossible to estimate exactly what amount of money the theatrical producers of America expend in their efforts to cater to the vast clientele which looks to this form of amusement for relief from the dull cares of the daily routine or the highly charged nervous wear and tear of a swift commercial era, but averages are possible. And, though lacking somewhat in definiteness, they tell a story of vast treasure all being poured through practically the one channel of enterprise.

To any one who has not stopped to consider the number of theaters required in a great country like this, the number of people employed, the multifarious business enterprises directly or indirectly affected by the unceasing demand for theatrical amusement, the figures at first sight may seem well-nigh incredible. But it may be borne in mind that any figures quoted here represent an average arrived at only after separate consultation with representatives of three or four of the most important and persistently active theatrical organizations in America; they should therefore, be accepted as reasonably trustworthy. In round figures there is invested in theatrical ventures in this country about $100,000,000.

Does this sum seem excessive?

Then remember the wide expanse of territory represented by the words United States of America, and try to realize that practically every city and hamlet in the land has its theater or opera house, that in every case the accessibility of the theater itself is a matter of supreme importance, and that this fact at once necessitates the expenditure of high rentals or the purchase of high-priced properties—that the operator of a theater, in fact, must expect at the very outset to pay the maximum of property values, whether he leases or buys.

In New York, for instance, the Rialto has steadily moved uptown, keeping pace with the city's growth northward, and to-day the costliest theaters in the world are centered about Times Square—in Broadway and in the adjacent side streets within a radius of half a dozen blocks from the point of supreme commercial competition.

Main street in the average American village would not be Main street without its theater or "Opera House," and there can be no doubt that in these smaller communities, as in the great metropolitan cities, the theater property will be found listed among the most valuable holdings in realty.

In Chicago there are 27, Baltimore 9, Washington 8, Buffalo 7, Cincinnati 11, while practically every one of the larger cities throughout the country has an average of from three to five theaters, and though for the time being many of them are given over to moving picture shows, they all represent an aggregate of capital invested for the sake of providing amusement for the public. Moreover, in every state of the union the smaller towns as well as the capitals and metropolis are well supplied with temples to the muse. The following table gives an approximate of the number of places in each state where regular attractions are booked, though there are some of the number undoubtedly that are merely public halls rather than well-equipped theaters. But it must be remembered also that innumerable minor towns have halls where theatrical entertainments are given, and these are not comprised in the booking schedules.

Principal Cities; Number of Theaters.—New York 75, Brooklyn 23, Jersey City 4, Hoboken 1, Newark 8, Boston 16, Providence 6, Philadelphia 23, Baltimore 9, Washington 8, Buffalo 7, Rochester 5, Albany 5, Syracuse 3, Pittsburg 8, Cleveland 8, Columbus 5, Cincinnati 11, Detroit 8, Chicago 27, St. Louis 11, Milwaukee 8, St. Paul 6, Minneapolis 10, Omaha 4, Kansas City 8, Denver 4, San Francisco 7, Los Angeles 7, New Orleans 9, Louisville 5, Indianapolis 4, Toledo 5.

Number of Theaters in Each State—(List does not include theaters in cities mentioned above)—Alabama 27, Arizona 12, Arkansas 19, California 63, Colorado 30, Connecticut 34, Delaware 4, Florida 19, Georgia 35, Idaho 26, Illinois 126, Indiana 95, Indian Territory 7, Iowa 124, Kansas 81, Kentucky 36, Louisiana 24, Maine 37, Maryland 20, Massachusetts 70, Michigan 98, Minnesota 57, Mississippi 26, Missouri 81, Montana 14, Nebraska 70, Nevada 10, New Hampshire 22, New Jersey 33, New York 150, North Carolina 46, Ohio 134, Oklahoma 17, Oregon 22, Pennsylvania 141, Rhode Island 11, South Carolina 27, South Dakota 36, North Dakota 16, Tennessee 31, Texas 90, Utah 39, Vermont 20, Virginia 42, Washington 22, West Virginia 29, Wisconsin 67, Wyoming 13.

Here, then, we have an aggregate of 2,616 theaters of one kind or another which get regular bookings.

It is a peculiar fact that even the most narrow-minded and puritanically inclined farmer with a head dead set against the theaters, is often, though he may not know it, under obligations to the theatrical producer for the profits that enable him to "lift the mortgage from the old place." For the scenery there is required lumber, from which the frames to hold the canvas are made, bringing a profit to the lumber yards, then to the mill, and finally back to the lumberman or farmer who owned the standing timber. Hundreds of thousands of square yards of canvas and linen are used to cover these frames, and here the returns, first to the dealer, eventually reach the manufacturer who sold him the material, and ultimately get to the men who grew the cotton and flax—the farmer once again. Immense quantities of hardware are also used, with the resultant profit to the dealer, the manufacturer, and the miner, and from many sources the wage earner, had he the mind to do so, might ultimately trace his earnings to the door of the theater.

In Klaw & Erlanger's production of "Ben Hur," for instance, one of the largest of all theatrical organizations, for which an entirely new equipment is being made this season, over five miles of rope are used for hoisting and lowering the scenery, and another class of people derive their various benefits from this need of the producer. There are used also thousands of yards of invisible netting and gauzes. All of this was imported formerly, but most of it is now manufactured in this country. Last, but by no means least, over 2,000 costumes are used in "Ben Hur" alone.

The lowest estimate of a good one-night stand house is $400 a week, and this is possible only when the local manager can get free labor for the running of the stage, as in towns where boys and young men will qualify as grips in order to have the privilege of seeing the shows. In such cases they charge nothing for their services.

The regular stage staff of a theater for a small show consists of six fly and gallery men, two property men, two electricians, two carpenters and six grips. The carpenters and electricians get from $25 to $30 a week, the grips get from $1.00 to $1.50 a night. This is only for a small show. In a large spectacle like "Little Nemo," for instance, 40 property boys alone were required. "The Sins of Society," a large, spectacular melodrama which Klaw & Erlanger produced in Chicago in the spring, required 35 stage hands, 21 clearers, 14 electricians, extra wardrobe women, and enlarged orchestra. The regular acting staff was supplemented, moreover by 120 men supers and 50 or more women supers. These people get an average of 50 cents a night, and as there are numerous shows on the road which require from ten to fifty "extra people" another large sum of money is expended in items not covering the actual acting cast.

Before the curtain line for the average attraction an orchestra leader and an orchestra of ten men are required. The leader gets $30, and the others $25 a week.

Five hundred tailors, seamstresses, dressmakers, buttonhole makers, and bootmakers draw revenue from this department alone, which must still depend upon occasional outside concerns in times of special pressure, when many shows are making ready for the season. If armor is required, it is imported.

In a season in New York there are employed in the various theaters and departments about 200 wig makers, 800 ushers, 1,000 bill posters, 2,000 stage hands, 200 property men, 500 scenic artists, 200 shoemakers, 1,000 musicians, 200 electricians, 5,000 costumers, dressmakers, etc. It is estimated that 65 people on an average are employed to operate a big Broadway theater, and with the actors, singers and choruses included, it is possibly no exaggeration to say that such a theater employs more people and pays them better than the largest store in a town of 100,000 inhabitants. In the season there are employed in New York about 5,000 chorus girls, including those who have small roles, and whom the showmen still regard as members of the chorus, though they and their friends would probably resent the imputation. The average salary of these girls is $18 a week. Principals, of course, command large sums when they can find work, and the few favored ones may earn at times as much as $1,000. The oft-repeated statement that star actors are better paid than United States senators, supreme court justices, governors or mayors, is probably not untrue in certain specific cases.

The printing bill for large cities in the case of a big show like "Ben Hur" will call for $1,000 a week, and will not drop much below that in smaller places. The salary sheet, the live stock, the orchestra, and the printing are the fixed charges of a show. These are never changed, except in case business does not come up to expectations, in which case the shrewd manager, as one representative put it, will increase his advertising—the only real method of increasing his receipts.

Variable items are the railroad fares and transfer accounts, the latter being the charges for hauling the scenery and properties, trunks, etc., to and from the theaters to the cars. In a broken week the local transfer charges of about $300 are doubled.

The average profit of a successful season for a manager is about ten per cent.

It is estimated that Charles Frohman employs, directly or indirectly, in America and England about 10,000 persons. The extent of this manager's enterprises may be imagined from the following letter, which was recently sent by Alf Hayman to Hollis E. Cooley, secretary of the National Association of Theatrical Producing Managers, in response to Mr. Cooley's request, at the time the theatrical copyright was being jointly sought by all the managers, for a statement of Charles Frohman's gross investments in theatrical properties:

Mr. Hollis E. Cooley, Secretary, The National Association of Theatrical Producing Managers, 1,410-11 Times Building, City:

Dear Sir: As requested by you, I am herewith handing you a statement of the gross investment in theatrical properties, together with a tabulated statement of annual expenditures and persons employed. The statement involves the value of the theaters both owned and controlled by us and are as follows:

Theaters	$6,000,000
Annual salaries, performers and theater employes	3,750,000
Annual cost of productions (over)	400,000
Annual railroad fares	750,000
Annual printing and advertising	500,000
Annual transfer and hauling charges	75,000

The foregoing statement is, as you understand, not computed to a penny from our books, but it is an approximate statement and is reasonably accurate. If I can furnish you with any further information in the premises please advise me. Yours sincerely,

ALF HAYMAN.

Now, when it is remembered that in the various estimates and summaries the activities of only the three most active producing organizations have been considered, and that there are at least a dozen firms operating in New York and Chicago who make from three to ten productions a season, while innumerable companies are operated by individuals, the original estimate of $100,000,000 invested will seem reasonable enough. With the New York theater occupying an expensive site, and half a dozen other theaters in process of erection in New York, with new theaters projected in Chicago and various other large cities, with a constant increase in competition and the necessity for augmented expenditures, each firm trying to outdo its rival in lavishness of production, more and more money is being poured each year into this one channel of enterprise, and more and more of it, overflowing the confines of its original intention, filters out through various channels to bring profit to innumerable people who would be greatly surprised to learn to whom they are indebted for their wages. The strictly practical economists might put much of the expenditure under the head of unproductive consumption of wealth, since much of it is ultimately wasted. The same amount, for instance, employed in fertilizing vast acres of barren unused land would ultimately produce a greater communal benefit.

HARD TIMES AND MATRIMONY

There is probably not more than a fraction of one per cent. of truth in that unpleasant old proverb, "When poverty comes in at the door love flies out of the window," but it is not to be denied that when poverty is the first to take possession poor love has to sit on the doorstep and wait.

All through the year 1908 the little god had been shivering outside many homes where he had every expectation of spending a cozy and perfectly delightful twelvemonth. And during the year of hard times marriages fell off 20 per cent.

In Manhattan borough alone nearly 20,000 persons are going about in single blessedness—or otherwise, as they take it—who ought from the statistician's point of view to have been married last year.

The statistician takes a cold-blooded view of it, merely marking it down as an interesting fact to be "footed up" with other interesting facts. He hasn't a word to say about love's young dream and hope deferred and all the furtive tears for which those 10,000 nonexistent marriages are responsible. You can't make averages of such things as a young man's disappointment and a nice girl's heartache.

The results of hard times are always, first of all, fewer diamonds imported and fewer marriages recorded. Jewels and matrimony go hand in hand, as indications of a rising or falling in the barometer of prosperity.

HE BOUGHT

It was one of those moments when after dinner comfort and a pervading atmosphere of congeniality and well being are conducive to a flow of intellectuality. Smith, casting about for a topic that might serve as a vehicle for a flight among the upper spheres, hit upon a happy thought.

"How remarkable it is that after Michael Angelo Italy produced so few great architects," he remarked.

Jones heard with a sinister smile.

"Why, what's the matter with Lanuche?" he asked.

"Well, Lanuche hardly added anything to the art, should you say?" said Smith.

"Then there's Teruche," commented Jones.

"I have always regarded Teruche as rather decadent," was Smith's response, accompanied by a lofty wave.

"Saluche?"

"Oh, distinctly fourth rate."

"There still remains Skabuche," suggested Jones.

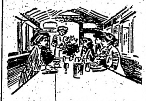
Smith turned a fishy eye upon each member of the group and last of all upon Jones. And then came the explosion. When the merriment had subsided somewhat Smith came to the scratch manfully.

"Waiter!" he called.

USE FOR OLD HORSE CAR.

Two Dozen Form Summer Camp Home in Pretty Valley for Working Girls of New York.

New York.—As of pennies and pins, the final disposition of old street cars is a mystery. About two dozen Avenue A cars silently stole away from New York a couple of years ago. Up the Hudson valley they journeyed on flat cars until they landed at Mountainville, a little hamlet in Orange county, noted especially for its summer boarders. After a still overland trip of a mile or more they came to rest on the banks of a little stream that hurries through the valley.



Dinner in the Horse Car.

Lined up side by side, like tents in a soldiers' encampment, the cars now form a camp which is maintained by the Ethical Culture society of New York as a summer retreat for its working girl members. From May to October these girls are privileged to enjoy all the advantages of the camp for $3.50 a week.

The matron in charge attends to the cooking and superintends the daily life of the girls. A few girls working their way through school and desiring work for the summer are chosen to help the matron attend to the cleaning. The most substantial cars stand in a row by themselves and form the sleeping apartments. Two cots to a room is the average, but if a third is desired it is added, although this makes the place pretty crowded.

The cars are divested of wheels and rest on a firm foundation. Both doors can be kept open if necessary, as well as the windows, thus really affording as much fresh air as though the girls slept out of doors.

At a distance another group of cars comprise the kitchen, dining room, pantry and storehouse. The kitchen is as neat and convenient as those on dining cars. A street car is very conveniently transformed into a dining room by leaving the seats intact and running a long table up through the middle. Close at hand under the trees stands the ice chest and nearby a cement sink with drain leading to the stream below the camp. Behind the cars are a croquet ground and tennis court.

Throughout the clump of woods that adjoins the camp hammocks are swung, where the tired, footsore shopgirl may rest in quietness. Not the least of the charms of this unique camp is the creek that flows by its very doors. The clear, sparkling water is itself an invitation for a plunge and the girls are not slow to avail themselves of the privilege. The water is not deep, only here and there of sufficient depth for a swim, but wading is a delight that never grows old.

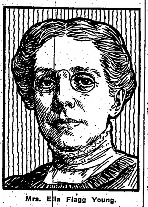
Chicago.—Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, the new superintendent of schools of this city, is a Chicago product. She was born in Buffalo, N. Y., January 15, 1845. But she was graduated from the Chicago high schools, the Chicago Normal school and obtained the degree of Ph. D. from the University of Chicago.



Mrs. Ella Flagg Young.

In 1868 she married William Young. She began teaching in 1862. From 1887 to 1889 she was a district superintendent of schools. For several years she was professor of education at the University of Chicago. She has been one of the popular educators in the public schools of Chicago. The women principals of the city have for several years had a club named after her. The activity of this club in pushing her candidacy was largely responsible for her success at the recent election.

Mrs. Young is the author of several books on pedagogical subjects. Among them are "Isolation in the School," "Ethics in the School," "Some Types of Modern Educational Theory" and a monograph on "Evolution and Educational Method." She is also the author of "Literature in the Elementary School" and several other books.

In addition to her work in the school Mrs. Young is an active member of the National Educational association.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter."—MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

A Methodist bishop was recently a guest at the home of a friend who had two charming daughters. One morning the bishop, accompanied by the two young ladies, went out in the hope of catching some trout. An old fisherman, out for the same purpose, wishing to appear friendly, called out:

The bishop, straightening himself to his full height, replied: "Brother, I am a fisher of men."

"You've got the right kind o' bait, all right," was the fisherman's rejoinder.—Success Magazine.

Knife of the Surgeon Has Done Much to Eliminate Ills That Flesh Is Heir To.

Surgery of the present day is not at all dismayed by the somewhat discouraging maxim that man is fearfully and wonderfully made. The knife has entered upon a course of extirpation that promises to eliminate, even if by heroic methods, some of the ills that flesh is heir to. Already it has become a not infrequent operation to remove the vermiform appendix in early childhood in order to do away with the possibility of perilous appendicitis in adult life. But progress is the onward cry of science. It has become elementary to live usefully with one lung or one kidney. That is only taking advantage of a duplicate precaution of nature. The removal of the stomach, once cited in the textbooks as wonderful, has become a well-known, if infrequent, expedient that merely entails upon the subject attention to a diet restricted in variety.

But now an authority upon bacteria, Prof. Metchnikoff, finds that the ailments of advancing age are due largely to poisoning by maleficent germs which have their habitat in the large intestine. The logical inference is obvious. If man may prolong life with but that organ away with it. There is confirmation of the doctrine in the further investigations of Dr. Distaso, who has collected and compared a number of recorded cases of this operation.

IN THE COURT of LAST RESORT

By WILLARD FRENCH

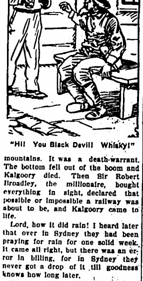
(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

Never was I so near "beat out" as the night when I finally struck the trail and wallowed into the alleged "inn," a day's ride down from Kalgoory and two days up from the coast, in the wildest of the Austalian mountains.

Rain? I never knew what rain was before, and have never seen it more than sprinkle since. You could not breathe without sheltering your nose, and I believe one could have drowned standing upright on the top of a rock. When it began I was out in the bush with two naked native helpers, plotting a possible path, through those infernally erratic defiles, for the new railway that was to connect Kalgoory with the coast.

Rain? Dear Heaven! The two natives crept into a cave and both were drowned there. Four solid hours I waded, swam, wallowed, gulped, then more dead than alive crawled into the inn, reminding myself of a rat I once pulled from a mud-hole by the tail after holding him down with a stick long enough for him to have drowned twice over.

The railway is going in great shape now and Kalgoory is a place. Then it was only a mad mining corpse just coming back to life. It had boomed its boom and got its crowd together, with no end of saloons, a newspaper, and telegraphic communication with the coast; but there was no other connection except an evasive bridle-trail to transport necessities up and luxuries—dust and ore—down, without an apparent possibility of ever getting so much as a two-wheeled cart through those crazy intervening mountains. It was a death-warrant. The bottom fell out of the boom and Kalgoory died. Then Sir Robert Broadley, the millionaire, bought everything in sight, declared that possible or impossible a railway was about to be, and Kalgoory came to life.



"Hi! You Black Devil! Whisky!"

Lord, how it did rain! I heard later that over in Sydney they had been praying for rain for one solid week. It came all right, but there was an error in billing, for in Sydney they never got a drop of it till goodness knows how long later.

The inn which I struck was no place like home. It was only a cook-while-you-wait shack for transients who were better used and satisfied to do their sleeping in the open. It was kept by a half-caste—a fellow cast half-way between a human effort and an ape—who had precious little variety in his larder and less in his vocabulary. There were two more fugitives from the injustice of the elements already established there. One was a young priest on his way to contend with the flesh and the devil up at Kalgoory, who gave his time to religious mutterings and paid little attention to the rest of us. But the other was a paragon! a marvel of good nature and of unlimited resources. But for him there would have been hardly an obituary left of me by the end of three mortal days and nights while the heavens stayed wide open and we huddled in the leaking inn. His other name was hard to remember, so I called him the Elixir of Life.

On my third afternoon at the inn, the fourth day of the storm, it received a knock-out from the northwest, and the mud-plastered postman stopped for a drink on his way—four days later—to Kalgoory. The Elixir and I contributed a bob apiece for an ancient newspaper he had about him and settled ourselves to read. Many a fresh Australian daily is a dead loss at a penny, but this was cheap at two bob. It startled us from our stagnation with a thunderbolt—the murder of Sir Robert Broadley, up at Kalgoory, four days before; telegraphed to the coast and printed, then brought back to us as vital news only a day's ride from where it happened. There was no evidence of robbery except that the assassin had cut off the little finger of his victim, upon which he was known to have worn a unique and beautiful diamond ring. The people looked upon Sir Robert as their deliverer. They were frantic and promised the criminal a real American lynching, spiced with aboriginal Australian tortures, when they laid hands on him, which was sure to be soon, for the villain could not have got far away. Every outlet from the mountains was now effectively guarded, and a minute description was given of a stranger who had been seen following Sir Robert just before the deed and since had disappeared.

My personal interest centered in the effect it would have upon the proposed railway, and I was pondering it when the outer door opened again. The storm was subsiding as rapidly as it came, but the fellow who entered had evidently been out in the whole of it. He grunted a kind of salutation and staggered to a rude bench before the open fire, where he dropped like a dead log, calling to the ape-faced landlord:

"Hi! you black devil! Whisky! A jugful! Damn quick!"

It was a fresh opening for the Elixir, and he was in it in an instant, bending over the fellow and gently as a woman asking what he could do for him.

"Ye kin mind yer own damn business!" the fellow muttered. "I got into a landslide four days ago, comin' down from Kalgoory. Lost my horse and been clingin' by my eyelashes ever since till the postman give me a lift. I'm a bit done, same's you'd be, but I ask no odds from God or man and I don't take none from such as you. Hi, you monkey! Where's that whisky?"

Undaunted, the Elixir stood, his soulful eyes fixed on the poor fellow in unshaken sympathy. The half-caste was ambling slowly across the room with a bottle and glass. The man on the bench sat glaring with bloodshot eyes at the Elixir. Just as the innkeeper reached him he muttered:

"Didn't I tell yer to—er— Ye lobster-eyed—er—"

With words still gurgling in his throat he fell over on the bench unconscious.

"It is better so," the Elixir said, gently stuffing a blanket under his head for a pillow and lifting his feet to the bench. "Sleep will help him more than that hell-fire you call whisky. Go heat up some of the stuff you said was soup this noon."

The Elixir returned to the window and his newspaper. I watched the unconscious face till the glint of the firelight across it dazzled me and the hypnosis of his steady snoring made me sleepy. I was beginning to doze when the Elixir touched my arm, pointing to something he had written on the margin of the paper opposite the description of the murderer: "Compare this with the man on the bench, and if you agree with me pass it on to Father Belcher."

The only thing which astonished me was that I had not thought of it before or that the man's own account of himself had not suggested it. The priest read it carefully, then went over to the bench and read it again. He crossed himself and muttered a prayer. Allowing for such days and nights as he had spent out in the storm the pen picture was perfect. The Elixir stood up and, looking out of the window, said:

"A red sunset and a fair to-morrow, so we shall part in the morning. Let's have a breath of fresh air together first."

We understood and followed him outside. Close upon the horizon the masses of gold and crimson cloud were following the sun away. The Elixir cast one admiring glance over the glorious wilderness, then his being changed to something entirely new, even after all that he had been before. He spoke rapidly and earnestly:

"That fellow is stark mad," he said. "He was demented when he did it. It is like the work of a maniac. Perhaps he'd lost everything up there and charged it to Sir Robert. Besides he is helplessly ill. Do unto others as ye would, applies to us. If we leave him here and go our ways, the fiends from Kalgoory will tear him in pieces. If he is crazy he ought at least to have a show of justice, and we can secure it for him if you will help me. I have handled maniacs several times and always successfully. We two can easily get him to the coast if we are not overtaken by a mob from behind. You are starting for Kalgoory in the morning, Father, and will doubtless meet searching parties coming down. It will insure success if you will tell them that the man is already captured, in safe hands, and well on his way to the coast by way of the Lower Fork, where he will be given into custody. Keep them from following if possible. If not, then send them by the Lower Fork. The day after to-morrow wire privately to some one you can trust. Say that the prisoner will be at Baldwin's by Friday noon. Tell them of his condition, so that they will be prepared to care for him properly."

After a little parley the priest consented, and did his work so well that the plan worked out to the end. It did not rouse the man, even when the Elixir made him drink the soup and relieved him of a rusted revolver, some cartridges, an ugly knife with black-red rust spots on the blade. Then the moon rose in a clean-swept sky, and the Elixir proposed that we start at once, lest the people of Kalgoory do the same.

We borrowed a cob from the half-caste for the prisoner, who was evidently an old horseman for he sat the saddle by instinct. He would not pay the slightest attention to me, but heeded every suggestion of the Elixir, to whose watchfulness he owed his life many times over during that rapid and dangerous journey.

The officers with a physician met us at Baldwin's, but for the first time the prisoner became obstreperous. He clung to his deliverer, fighting and yelling, and kicking every one else, till for the sake of peace they persuaded him to continue with them, and we parted abruptly, I at least never more reluctantly.

Two weeks later, back in the bush, a letter came to me by way of Kalgoory.

Before you open this I shall have left the Convict isle for quarters undiscoverable, as it was I who killed the demon at Kalgoory. Finding myself in a trap, and worse, that I was recognized by the fellow who came in on us, looking so like the printed picture of my so-different self, I was forced to utilize him, and incidentally saved his life by getting him to a hospital, in return for his getting me out of the trap. I must make this unfolding to you, that you may stand by him again if by remotest chance the suspicion should cling to him. I did it; but, lest you smite yourself for having helped me unwittingly, let me add: if you had been in my place you would have done as I did to the fiend who wore that ring. I have kept it as my only consolation through whatever years are left. If I could tell you the story of the ring, you would not regret having aided—

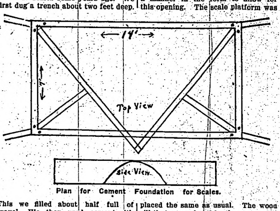
CEMENT IN CONSTRUCTION OF THE FARM SCALES

Implement That No Farmer Can Well Get Along Without and Should Be Built in Substantial Manner.

—By Fred G. Miner.

Now that a large corn crop is pretty well assured, many farmers are casting about for something to weigh their corn. This is right, and a good pair of scales should be on every farm. They should be put up substantially, and, if possible, should be built so that loose hay or straw and stock of all kinds can be weighed, writes Fred G. Miner in Farmers' Review. For this the scales must be placed without a cover.

I am giving a plan of the way we built our scales some years ago. We first dug a trench about two feet deep. This we filled about half full of gravel. We then used cement with the gravel until we had reached about 18 inches above the ground. We also made our apparatus at the same time. When we had reached 18 inches high, we leveled the same, and, instead of using wooden or steel sills, we changed from the well traveled road of scale building, and decided to use cement sills. Our scales are bolted at each corner—B. To keep the bolts in place we had a wagon tire bent at right angles at each corner, and each one had holes bored in it at just the right place to bolt the scale irons to it. These angle irons were placed one at each corner—I. They hold the bolts in place with the thread and down far enough to hold the scale irons. Our form was then continued eight inches higher and filled with concrete and the job was finished. An opening had to be made for the scale irons to come through the foundation. This was done by using a board one-half by six inches and bending in such a manner in the form to allow for this opening. The scale platform was placed the same as usual. The wood sill that we replaced by the cement sill would have cost not less than ten dollars. It took ten dollars' worth of cement for the entire job, foundation, sill and approaches. We got the gravel for the hauling, and I and the hired man did the work. We used the scales for everything, and have weighed as much as four tons at a time. The neighbors in rebuilding are using my plan, and all like it. It is much cheaper than steel or wood and more durable.



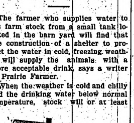
Plan for Cement Foundation for Scales.

OUTDOOR WATER TANK COVERING

Farmer Will Find Construction of Shelter to Protect Water in Winter Beneficial.

The farmer who supplies water to his farm stock from a small tank located in the barn yard will find that the construction of a shelter to protect the water in cold, freezing weather will supply the animals with a more acceptable drink, says a writer in Prairie Farmer.

When the weather is cold and chilly and the drinking water below normal temperature, stock will or at least ought not to take it to the extent necessary to adequately supply their wants.



An Outdoor Tank Cover.

Early in the winter before cold weather permanently sets in, the watering tank should be put into shape for use and convenience. If the tank is located some distance from any building it will become necessary to make more permanent arrangements than if located in the barn.

With our system of watering we find it necessary to have two large tanks situated in open yards for supplying water to the stock. These tanks, were it not for adequate shelter, would cause unlimited trouble during severe weather, but under our system we find no trouble in keeping the water in good condition during the coldest of weather.

TURNIP CROP TO TURN UNDER

Nothing Grown That Furnishes So Cheaply and Abundantly So Large Amount of Humus.

The reason I advocate the growing of turnips on an unlimited scale are that to my knowledge there is not a crop grown that furnishes so cheaply, abundantly and in so short a time so large a quantity of humus for succeeding crops. While I sell large quantities of them, they are always sown as a humus crop and often turn out to be a money crop by disposing of them in the market. I find this so satisfactory that on my small farm, consisting of about 30 acres, every available acre in the late summer or fall is sown to turnips of different varieties and sometimes scarlet clover seed is mixed in, writes a correspondent of the Agriculturist.

It sometimes occurs that an unexpectedly large crop is raised where none is looked for. The past fall, owing to an early and very destructive frost which occurred in our vicinity, hundreds of acres of corn were almost entirely destroyed. Other crops, such as late beans, tomatoes and vines of all descriptions, suffered likewise. In our own case ten acres of cowpeas and soy beans were killed outright. The sowing of this entire field to turnips in time and long before the killing frost occurred produced a truly wonderful crop.

The result I look for next year. This field with its heavy crop of cowpea vines, supplemented with several tons of decayed turnips an acre, will not only make an ideal field for growing vegetables, but will grow a large crop of any kind at a comparatively small outlay for enriching the soil. The course I have followed in growing something besides weeds on the soil has been a source of a great deal of satisfaction in maintaining soil fertility and is one of the secrets of raising good vegetables.

Feeding Sheep.

There are several points in feeding sheep that must not be overlooked. The feed lot must be dry, with plenty of clean, dry bedding; the animals must have plenty of clean, pure water, and the feed troughs should be kept clean. These should be arranged so that the sheep cannot foul them with their feet. Another point is to keep them from becoming excited or frightened. To this end it is better that one person feed them all the time.

Supplemental Feeds.

Following a year's work in swine producing in which 90 hogs have been used the Alabama station announces that money was lost in every case where corn was fed without a supplement either of green crops or concentrates. Tankage proved a very satisfactory feed. Four deaths resulted from the use of cotton-seed meal, but not while the animals were eating the meal, but soon after they were placed on another ration.

Deep Plowing.

In general it may be stated that when the soil is plowed three inches deep, the plants have three inches of food, and when plowed ten inches deep, ten inches of food.

SCIENTIFIC TRAINING IMPORTANT FACTOR

How Young Man After Course in Agricultural College Made Big Improvement on Father's Farm.

The value of thorough training, and the growth of respect for theoretical knowledge based on demonstrated facts is well illustrated in a recently recorded instance of a farmer's son who took a college course in agriculture, says Pacific Unitarian. When he finished his studies he told his father he proposed trying out what he had learned in a position offered him.

"Why do you want to go away? Why not take our farm?"

"I am willing to, if I can have full charge and do just what I please."

This presented a trial to the father, for he was the most successful farmer in the community, and didn't want to [illegible] and he said, "All right, go ahead."

The young man took over the management. His father reported the result to a friend.

"The first thing he did was to hitch three horses to the plow. I had never done it, nor heard of it, but I saw right away it was the thing to do. Then he took much more trouble in getting strong and clean seed than ever I had done, and the result was that the first year his crops were far better than mine ever were. The next year they were better yet. Our neighbors began to copy his ways, and now the farmers round here get fifty thousand dollars a year more out of the ground than they did before my boy went to college."

And yet there are human moles who say we are suffering from too much education.

Orchard Grass.

If orchard grass is not sown thickly it will not be a success. Three bushels to the acre should be used. Orchard grass is more vigorous than timothy, with a stronger root system, but if a permanent meadow is expected it must be top-dressed freely. [illegible]

PAINT BEAUTY.

Assured of durability, the next thought in painting is beauty—the complete aim being durable beauty, or beautiful durability.

David Price, Corydon, Ia., says: "I was in the last stage of kidney trouble—lame, weak, run down to a mere skeleton. My back was so bad I could hardly walk and the kidney secretions much disordered. A week after I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I could walk without a cane, and as I continued my health gradually returned. I was so grateful I made a public statement of my case, and now seven years have passed, I am still perfectly well."

A Classic in Kentucky.

They have been telling this story down in the Blue Grass so long that the Louisville Courier-Journal says it is regarded as a classic:

"Majah," announced the colonel, "I'll bet I've sweat no less than 17 gallons!"

"Begging your pardon, kunnel," returned the major, desisting from a long libation, "gentlemen don't sweat; they perspire. Horses sweat."

"Well, then," returned the now irritated colonel, glaring at the calm and contented critic of his diction, "by gad, suh, I'm a hoss!"

People Becoming Interested.

Evidence of the popular interest in the anti-consumption crusade is given in a statement made by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, to the effect that during the year ending August 31, nearly 3,000,000 people have attended tuberculosis exhibitions in various parts of the country. Besides the three traveling tuberculosis exhibitions of the national association, there are 28 exhibits of this kind throughout the United States. Four years ago there were only three such displays in the entire country.

Trifle Too Esthetic.

"There's no use o' talkin'," said Farmer Corntossel, as he sat down on the horse trough. "I can't git along with some o' these here summer guests." "What's the trouble?" "I have jes' been lectured by that good lookin' young woman with glasses fur sp'ilin' the color scheme of the garden by puttin' paris green on the vegetables."

Latest from Atchison.

This is the latest story in Atchison: A young visiting man was declaring that the theory is all nonsense about kissing being dangerous on account of germs conveyed from one mouth to another. "I've kissed hundreds of girls," he declared, "and I'm not dead yet."

THREE REASONS

Each with Two Legs and Ten Fingers.

A Boston woman who is a fond mother writes an amusing article about her experience feeding her boys.

Among other things she says: "Three chubby, rosy-cheeked boys, Rob, Jack and Dick, aged 6, 4 and 2 years respectively, are three of our reasons for using and recomending the food, Grape-Nuts, for these youngsters have been fed on Grape-Nuts since infancy, and often between meals when other children would have been given candy.

"I gave a package of Grape-Nuts to a neighbor whose 3 year old child was a weazened little thing, ill half the time. The little tot ate the Grape-Nuts and cream greedily and the mother continued the good work, and it was not long before a truly wonderful change manifested itself in the child's face and body. The results were remarkable, even for Grape-Nuts.

"Both husband and I use Grape-Nuts every day and keep strong and well and have three of the finest, healthiest boys you can find in a day's march."

Many mothers instead of destroying the children's stomachs with candy and cake give the youngsters a handful of Grape-Nuts when they are begging for something in the way of sweets. The result is soon shown in greatly increased health, strength and mental activity.

Thief River Falls People Can't Make Injunction Proceedings Stick.

Red Lake Falls Won on Every Point Contended for Before Judge Watts.

Judge Watts, in chambers at Crookston, on Saturday afternoon judiciously disposed of the injunction proceedings instituted by Thief River Falls people to delay the construction of a new courthouse in Red Lake Falls.

Judge Watts had three weeks before issued a temporary restraining order. The attorneys for the commissioners asked that the restraining order be dissolved and that the court make an order determining that the commissioners may enter into a contract for the construction of a new court house at a cost not to exceed $15,500. The Thief River attorneys argued against the granting of the motion and made an attempt to defeat the five mill court house tax levy and moved that the court make an order requiring the commissioners to reconsider their action in making the levy. But Judge Watts denied the motion.

The court issued an order, now on file in the clerk of court's office, dissolving the twenty-day restraining order. In words the meaning of which cannot be misconstrued, the commissioners are given authority to let the contract for the construction of a court house at a cost not to exceed $15,500 and they are authorized to incur an indebtedness to that amount. In the same instrument the court disposes of the tax levy question and holds that the five-mill court house tax levy is valid.

A judicial determination of these two questions was very desirable and the matter has been very satisfactorily disposed of—thanks again to the Thief River people for doing what was expected of them. As has been previously stated, there is no doubt that the commissioners are acting lawfully. Thief River Falls' activity is simply for the purpose of accomplishing selfish ends. If it were not so they would cease carrying on useless litigation and making a fight simply to embarrass the county commissioners. The "poor farmers" and the tax payers, about whose interests they express so much concern, are paying for Thief River's fight on the county commissioners.

The commissioners were represented at Crookston by Attorneys Boughton and Grady of Red Lake Falls. E. T. Young, former attorney general and G. Halvorson represented the Thief River Falls people who are making the fight.

New Postmaster at Plummer.

Wednesday morning Mr. Ole Johnson took charge of the Plummer postoffice Mr. Latta having resigned about a month ago. Mr. Johnson will without doubt make a very satisfactory postmaster. He is an old resident of this section having previously served for eight years as county commissioner from this district. Miss Clara Johnson will be assistant postmaster. Mr. Latta has not given out what his plans for the future are but will remain in his present location for another week. He has however sold all his holdings here and the rumor is that he will locate at Crookston. Mr. Latta is a man of no mean ability and with out doubt will succeed in whatever he undertakes. He was the founder of the Pioneer and published it for about five years.—Plummer Pioneer.

Steamer Foundered.

The steamer Na-Ma-Puk, Erick Starren captain, foundered in Lake of the Woods Saturday afternoon in crossing from Bigsby's island to the south shore across that portion of the lake known as the Big Traverse. She had on board a crew of five a United States customs officer and Mr. and Mrs. Carr of Manchester, Iowa.

All were safely transferred to a barge that was in tow for use in carrying fish. The tow line was cut and the barge drifted to shore near the mouth of the Rainy river. After spending a chilly night on shore the passengers and crew were taken on board a Canadian boat and taken to Baudette where they came to Warroad by rail.

The steamer sprang a leak that the pumps could not cope with and the boat rapidly filled and sank in three-quarters of an hour. She was owned by the Armstrong Trading company and had been in the fish carrying trade on the Lake of the Woods for several years.—Greenbush Tribune.

TAFT WILL NOT TALK POLITICS

The President Will Make Jollying Junket Through the Northwest.

Paul Pry's Gossipy Gossip From the Capital City.

St. Paul, Sept. 6—Whatever he may do elsewhere it seems to be anticipated that President Taft will not talk politics during his visit to St. Paul. He is to be here on the 18th of September. The arrangements for his reception indicate that he is to be greeted not as the head of the Republican party, but as the President of the United States; and, considering the character of the committees appointed, it is difficult to see how he can defend the tariff, urge the regulation of railroads, the control of corporation, or take sides on any other matter of public policy without giving just cause of offense to some one or other of those who have been selected as his hosts.

Taft's Reception Committee

I am led to this conclusion by a consideration of the names on the list of one hundred who have been designated to receive the city's distinguished guest. It will not be necessary to go through it. The first half dozen names or so will be enough to show the character of the reception. Eli Warner is its chairman. While Mr. Warner is a Republican he probably does not owe his prominence among the president's hosts to any service he has rendered the Republican party, but rather to the fact that he is president of the Commercial club. With him are associated and head the list, James J. Hill, Governor Johnson, Frank Kellogg, Senator Clapp, Howard Elliott, the president of the Northern Pacific Railway, Mayor Lawler Louis W. Hill, the president of the Great Northern Railway, A. B. Stickney, the president of the Great Western Railway, and so on. It is the same way on the sub-committees. Party affiliations have been methodically ignored and it is difficult to see how, under the circumstances, the President can in any way defend, explain or even outline those policies it is his duty to carry out without violating the proprieties or offending some of those named to receive him. This will be regretted by those who had hoped that his visit here would result in smoothing over factional differences and solidifying party strength.

Disgruntled Republicans

Indeed the selection of the committee of one hundred, to whomever it was left has occasioned more than a little hard feeling among those who have borne the brunt of Republican battles, and who seem to have some reason to claim that they have not merely been ignored but actually discriminated against. Especially is there criticism of the prominence given the Hills, both father and son being among the first on the committee of one hundred, and it is intimated that, considering all the circumstances, it would have been in better taste and, as to that, better politics, not to have so obviously put them forward. If, it is asked, Johnson and Lawler, who are the recognized leaders of their party, were designated to receive the president, surely room might have been found for Schmahl, or Iverson, or Simpson, or Dinehart, or Dix, or Webster, or some one else representative of the Republican organization who is a resident of the city. Why make the President's reception a silk-stocking affair? Why not let common folks have a look-in? The men who are good enough to pull the laboring oar in organizing the state for Taft ought to be good enough to have some little thing to say about his reception at the state's capitol. I am inclined to sympathize with those who feel thus aggrieved, and to conclude with them that they have just cause to believe that they have been deliberately snubbed.

The Great Western Railway

There is a good deal of speculation here about the future of the Great Western which has recently been sold to J. Pierrpont Morgan for what is regarded as a song, and not a little consternation has been created by the fact that its general offices are to be moved to Chicago. They have always been located here, and added to St. Paul's prominence as a railroad center. It is, however, generally conceded that the sale has been a good thing, and will result in the road's being put in first class shape. The conclusion has been reached by those who keep in touch with railroad affairs that the Great Western is certain ultimately to form an integral part of the Hill system, altho on the outside it may appear to be operated independently. The close business association of Mr. Hill and Mr. Morgan is referred to as making this inevitable. It is not likely, it is pointed out, that with the interest Mr. Morgan has in the Pacific roads that he did not anticipate sharing in transcontinental traffic when he acquired the Great Western. This is the view of the people along the line of the road, and they look forward to its service being not only much better but more profitable to them in consequence.

No Demonstration

There will be no demonstration in honor of the Republican congressional insurgents. The Republican organization has set its face strongly against rewarding the rebellious. Indeed in this matter there are wheels within wheels, and in them not only are the prospects of the insurgent congressmen involved, but the senatorial succession as well. There isn't any question that at first the proposed demonstration was welcomed by the friends of Senator Clapp, and that they hoped that it would result in such a blanket endorsement of his whole senatorial course as would silence the opposition to his re-election. But if his enemies weren't saying much, they were more or less active; and by blunders which have made the demonstration ridiculous, those who have been active in bringing it about have played into the hands of the senator's opponents.

Clapp's Stand for Corporations

Incidentally attention has been directed to the fact that to allow Senator Clapp to sail into his seat in the senate on the crest of a wave of enthusiasm for tariff reform would be an

MAY LEAD TO SOME BIG IMPROVEMENTS

Trip of State Drainage Board Through the Red Lake Country.

Flow of Rivers Draining the Red Lakes Can be Regulated.

The recent trip through Red lake county made by the state drainage board may result in improvements that may regulate the flow of water into the Red lakes and regulate the flow of the Red lake river and the Red River of the north. By straightening and deepening the channel of the Red Lake river the waters of Red lake may be lowered so that by putting in substantial locks and dam at the outlet of the lake the flow of the rivers may be regulated.

It is calculated that, by lowering the waters of Red Lake three feet, all of the water forming the watershed of Red lake can be drained into Red lake; and it would take about six months to bring the lake back to its normal level. George A. Ralph, state drainage engineer, who was a member of the party, says the fact shows it would be possible to control the flood waters of the Red Lake River of the North at a comparatively small cost.

Attorney Thos. Germo has definitely decided to leave Red Lake Falls and he and Mrs. Germo are now making preparations for their leave-taking. They will go to Taylor, N. Dak., about Oct. 1, where Mr. Germo will open a bank and engage in the practice of law. Mr. Germo will no doubt make a success of the undertaking. A man of many fine qualities and one whose integrity will earn him the confidence of the business people, he is well fitted for his new work. The fact that he is well informed in the law will assist him materially in conducting a successful banking business.

The fact that Mr. and Mrs. Germo are to leave will cause general regret for they have ever been active in promoting what has been for the good of the community. Many friends will wish them business success and contentment in their new home.

NEW SEPARATOR BURNS

Louis Perrault Suffered Heavy Loss by Fire Tuesday Night.

A new seperator owned by Louis Perrault was burned Tuesday night. The fire occurred at the Ovila Rock farm. The machine had been moved to the farm Tuesday evening and was left standing in the field. At eleven o'clock at night the seperator was discovered to be on fire. An effort was made to put out the fire but it was impossible to do so and the self feed attachment is all that was saved.

It is a heavy loss for Mr. Perrault. The machine was worth about $1,000 and was not insured. Mr. Perrault went to Grand Forks yesterday to make arrangements for the purchase of a new machine.

CHARTER AMENDMENTS ADOPTED

Big Majority in Favor of Adoption of Report of the Commission.

Light Vote Was Cast and There Was Little Opposition.

In the special city election held Tuesday the report of the charter commission submitting proposed amendments to the city charter was adopted by a vote of nearly five to one. One hundred and fifteen votes were cast, ninety being recorded in favor of the adoption of the report of the commission and twenty-five against. It was a very light vote owing no doubt to the fact that there was little opposition to the adoption of the report.

The adoption of the amendments gives to the city council authority to grant long-time franchises for the conveyance of electricity, gas, water and sewerage. It is an authority that must be vested in the council if anything is to be done for the development of the water powers of the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers. Under the provisions of the charter before the adoption of the amendments the granting of a franchise for a longer term than five years was not permissable and that limitation of the authority of the council was a barrier to manufacturing development. Now the council will be in a position to consider any proposition that people with capital to invest and a desire to utilize the water power may make.

FARMER IS MURDERED

STRANGE MAN SUSPECTED

Mystery Surrounds Murder and Sheriff Seeks Clue in Vain.—Robbery Believed to Be the Motive for Commission of Crime.

Anoka.—Jacob Schwab, age 72, formerly living between Anoka and Coon Creek, lies cold in death at his little farm home, the victim of an unknown assassin. Schwab was shot down at his doorstep about 2 o'clock in the morning after he had been summoned from his bed by Paul Serignert, hired man, who told Mr. Schwab a stranger was at the door and wished to see him. Three shots were fired by the stranger and Mr. Schwab turned back to his room mortally wounded, the victim dying shortly after 7 o'clock after the attending physician had made every effort to save the old German's life.

Robbery appears to have been the motive for the commission of the murder, and the theory that it was a case of mistaken identity—that the slayer sought the life of the hired man, Serignert, as part of a secret society plot—is not taken seriously by the police. According to Henry Schwab, a son of the victim, Mr. Schwab recently received $200 as part payment for some land, and as this money cannot be found, it is believed that it was for this $200 that the murder was committed.

There were two men at the door of the Schwab home at the time of the shooting, Mr. Schwab himself making that fact known before he died. The hired man also says he saw a second man running away from the house. The man who shot Schwab was described by his victim as being tall and slender, dark complexioned and wore dark clothes. He said he never saw the man before in his life.

Schwab had lost the power of speech when his son, Henry, informed the authorities that his father had recently got $200 on the sale of land, so the whereabouts of this could not be learned through the elder Schwab and a search failed to develop anything.

Serignert, who is a Frenchman and does not talk English, has given the authorities very little information that would lead to unraveling the mystery. All he will say is that he was awakened in the night by the strangers who asked for Schwab, and that shortly after his employer had gone to the door he heard the shots. The hired man says he was upstairs at the time and when he heard the fire he looked out of the window and saw two men running away from the house.

ANOTHER MURDER OCCURS.

Oscar Larson Is Murdered While Saving a Friend From Robber's Bullet.

Minneapolis.—Oscar A. Larson, while attempting to save his friend from injury, was shot in the temple and instantly killed by one of a pair of highwaymen who attempted to rob the saloon of Charles Anderson, at 1:30 in the evening.

Five men besides Larson were in the saloon just before the closing hour when two men, the lower part of whose faces were concealed by blue handkerchiefs, entered at the back door on Eighth street. The shorter man rushed quickly through the saloon to the front door, and after locking it, turned toward Anderson.

"Hold up your hands," he demanded.

Turnquist and the other men in the saloon threw up their arms, but Anderson refused, at the same time reaching for a stool to throw at the desperado's head. The revolver was immediately turned upon him and the robber was about to fire when Larson, who was standing at the bar, grabbed the hand holding the weapon. A struggle lasting several seconds followed and the robber, finding himself overpowered, called to his friend.

"Shoot the beast," he cried. "Shoot quick!"

The taller man rose from his crouching position in the rear of the room at the call and shot. His aim was true for the bullet struck Larson in the right temple and he dropped dead without a struggle. The bullet passed through the head. Immediately the men rushed through the door by which they had entered, followed by all the men. Anderson, carrying the raised stool in his hand, hurled it at the murderer. He missed and they disappeared. No trace of them has been found.

GOOD ROADS BOND VALID.

Judge Dickinson Holds Enabling Act Constitutional.

Minneapolis.—Hennepin county's $1,000,000 goodroads bond issue has been declared valid by Judge Dickinson, of the district court. In his decision Judge Dickinson sustains the validity of the bonds and declares that the county commissioners may legally proceed in their campangn for the betterment of Hennepin county roads.

The bond issue was authorized at the last session of the legislature. The Minneapolis Automobile club was instrumental in securing the passage of the bill, and plans were at once made for the improvement of the roads of the county. The county commissioners authorized the issuance of $100,000 in bonds and adopted plans for the improvement of roads near Lake Minnetonka.

The $100,000 issue had been sold, when a question arose as to the validity of the issue. It was asserted that the legislative bill is unconstitutional and that the bond issue is void.

Believing that the question should be settled at once, the Automobile club, through President Horace Lowry, brought suit to restrain County Auditor Hugh R. Scott from issuing the bonds. G. A. Will, attorney for the club, drew the papers and the county officials were called into court to prove the legality of the issue.

In district court, Al J. Smith, county attorney, demurred to the complaint of Mr. Lowry, and the question of the validity of the bond issue was placed squarely before Judge Dickinson on the demurrer. In his decision sustaining the county attorney's demurrer, Judge Dickinson says the bond issue is legal, and disposes of the question.

The case will probably be appealed to the supreme court to obtain a final settlement, but attorneys believe Judge Dickinson will undoubtedly be sustained.

Judge Dickinson held in the decision that the fact that population was the basis for passing the bond issue was not a valid objection to its legality. "The question is to determine whether there is a rational relation between density of population and a need for more and better roads," says the opinion. "Laws which deal with conditions affecting a certain part of the population of a state have been held valid by the highest courts. A law to be constitutional does not have to apply to the entire population of the state, but to those affected by these certain conditions. The courts have no legislative powers and hence cannot undertake to classify certain counties or districts. That is in the province of the legislature. The law makes provision for all counties coming under the provisions of the statute, and many laws which come much nearer being special legislation have been held valid."

CANNOT SWITCH FUNDS.

Injunction in Red Lake County Halts Movement For New Courthouse.

Thief River Falls.—Former Attorney General Young of St. Paul and City Attorney Halvorsen of this city intervened on behalf of the taxpayers of Red Lake county in a suit brought last week by citizens of Red Lake Falls.

This suit sought to confirm the county commissioners in their recent action whereby they transferred $35,000 from the ditch fund, which was established by the sale of county ditch bonds at a recent date, to the courthouse building fund.

An injunction was issued prohibiting the commissioners from making such use of the ditch funds.

As some of these funds have been used in the county, it is probable that further suits will be instituted to discover their whereabouts.

An election will be held to divide the county at the next general election and until that is settled it is probable the courts will prohibit any attempt to construct a new courthouse.

"Well, Mrs. Dennis, what are you going to give Pat for Christmas this year?" inquired the recipient of Mrs. Dennis' regular washday visits, one day at the beginning of the festal season.

"Deed thin, ma'am, I don't know," replied Mrs. Dennis, raising herself from the washtub and shaking her dripping arms, "I've been thinkin' I'd give him a pair of [illegible] but, Lord bless ye, ma'am, only [illegible]"

ENJOYS HIS EXPEDITION

Specimens Brought Down By His Rifle and Shotgun Delight the Great Hunter of Big Game.

Government Farm, Naivasha, B. E. A., Sept. 2.—(August 1st.)—Colonel Roosevelt, accompanied by Major Mearns came into Naivasha on Thursday, July 22nd, riding around the East side of the lake while J. Alden Loring, naturalist, came across in Captain Attenborough's launch. Prof. Edmond Heller remained at Attenborough Farm to look after the hippo trophies.

Kermit Roosevelt had come into the township the day before and he and the correspondent went out to meet Colonel Roosevelt at lunch at the Governmental experimental farm on Morendat River, where he was entertained by J. K. Hill. After the meal, the party rode over the farm, inspecting the flocks of sheep and the pedigree stock.

Early next morning the correspondent went down to the camp and had breakfast with Roosevelt and Kermit, and then started off in a small row boat for Pelicans.

We had not gone far when Colonel Roosevelt brought down a couple of Egyptian geese with a very pretty shot. We then turned the boat for the usual hunting ground of pelicans and brought it within one hundred and fifty feet of two fine specimens. Roosevelt took careful aim and killed a splendid bird with a single shot from his rifle. The specimen delighted the Colonel beyond measure.

HARRIMAN CEASES LABOR.

Promises Family That He Will Not Do Hard Work.

New York, Sept. 2.—E. H. Harriman has promised his family that he will give up hard work for a lonf time. He has informed his associates that it will be necessary for other shoulders to carry the heavy burdens known as the Harriman railway policies.

Since Mr. Harriman returned, the distribution and division of these responsibilities has been going on under his directon. So far as the operaton of the Harriman railways is concerned nothing much is to be done in the way of looking out for a future without the direct superintendency of Mr. Harriman.

J. C. Stubbs, traffic director, and Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintainance and operations on the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, will be responsible for the well being of these two huge organizations. The differences in their positions is that the y will not have daily orders from Harriman headquarters.

In the past Harriman gave close attention to a great mass of detail. It was his habit to dictate matters which most railway owners left to subordinates. He even dictated letters, tlegrams and agreements that in other systems the presidents would not think of touching.

RELIEF WORK PROGRESSING

Flood Refugees Are Being Taken Care of in Great Number.

Monterey, Mexico, Sept. 2.—Great strides were made today in the relief work in Monterey, which was swept recently in a disastrous flood, causing great loss of life, and refugees are being taken care of as well as possible. The destruction wrought by the flood comprises one hundred and two city blocks in three different sections of the city. These districts are a mass of ruins and in most cases are swept clean, leaving nothing but deposits of sand.

The first relief car arrived last night from San Antonio and food and wearing apparel will be turned over to relief committees working in conjunction with the consul general, Mr. Hanna. Another carload of supplies arrived this afternoon.

MAY NOT CLAIM LANDS.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 2.—State department officials are of the opinion that it is of little consequence to the United States what lands Dr. Cook has discovered on his way to the North Pole, so far as actual territorial possession is concerned.

TAFT WILL VISIT ALASKA.

Beverly, Mass., Sept. 2.—President Taft is bidding good bye today to Walter Ely Clark, who is to be inaugurated as governor of Alaska, October 1st, announced that he would probably visit the far northwestern territory next summer. It is reported that if the president should go to Alaska next year, he may extend his trip to include the Hawaiian Islands.

CUSTERS FIGHT REPRODUCED

Pierre, S. D., Sept. 2.—Captain Dewell and the other officers and men of Company B, of the state troops, play the part of Custer and his men in the historical production of "Custer's Last Battle," which will be put on in this city during registration, and the Cheyenne Indian reservation Indians [illegible] will be Chief [illegible] the leaders in the Custer massacre.

The KITCHEN CABINET

LET onion atoms lurk within the bowl
And half suspected, animate the whole."
—Sidney Smith.

"Onions will make even heirs or widows weep."

Miscellaneous Notes.

Green harmonizes with most all colors, which makes it a very desirable color for wall coloring in a living room; it is restful.

In selecting furniture do not buy fads. Old models are better than new. Have it plain with few places to gather dust.

Let us get rid of bric-a-brac and have only useful things.

Lemon Icing for Orange Cake.

Take one beaten egg, one cupful of sugar two teaspoonfuls of flour, one tablespoonful of water, the grated rind and juice of one lemon. Cook until thick, stirring constantly.

HOT WEATHER DISHES.

Lemon Ice.

Make a syrup by boiling four cupfuls of water with two cupfuls of sugar, add three-fourths of a cupful of strained lemon juice, cool and freeze.

Milk Sherbet.

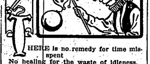
Mix the juice of three lemons with one cupful of sugar, stir and add four cupfuls of milk. Freeze.

Sorbet.

Boil together two cupfuls each of water and sugar. When cool add one can of grated pineapple, one and one-third cupfuls of orange juice and one-half cupful of lemon juice and a quart of Apollinaris water. Freeze.

Brown Bread Ice Cream.

Soak one and one-fourth cupfuls of dried brown bread crumbs in one quart of cream, let stand 15 minutes, rub through a sieve, add seven-eighths of a cupful of sugar, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt and another pint of cream; then freeze. This tastes like macaroon cream.



THERE is no remedy for time misspent
No healing for the waste of idleness,
Whose very languor is a punishment
Heavier than active souls can feel or guess.
O, hours of indolence and discontent,
Now, now to be redeemed! Ye sting not less
Because I know this span of life was lent
For lofty duties, not for selfishness.
Not to be whiled away in endless dreams,
But to improve ourselves and serve mankind,
Life and its choicest faculties were given.
Man should be even better than he seems
And shape his acts and discipline his mind
To walk adoring earth with hope of heaven."
—Sir Arthur De Vere.

Bouillon Cups.

It used to be imperative to serve bouillon only in the little cups, and to serve also only bouillon in them. Now, with a sudden acquisition of good sense, fashion decrees that any kind of soup, a thick puree as well as a consomme, may be passed in the two-handled cups heretofore reserved for the serving of thin bouillon.

The Happy People.

The really happy people in this world are those who are doing things. How sweet is the rest that comes at night after a day of thoughtful, successful work. No day is perfect that had not had in it some helpful purpose for others. The interruptions which often irritate and annoy may be the means of great blessing. "Our grand business in life is to do," says Carlyle, "that which lies clearly at hand."

Hints to the Young Housekeeper.

Creaking doors and drawers should be rubbed with hard soap.

All dishes which have contained milk should be first rinsed with cold water.

Nut and Potato Croquettes.

Coarsely chop sufficient black walnut meats to measure one cupful. Mix them with one cupful of mashed and seasoned potatoes and one cupful of soft bread crumbs. Stir in to well-beaten eggs, add seasonings of salt, pepper and onion juice, a few drops of lemon juice and three tablespoonfuls of beef stock. When cold mold into croquettes and fry in deep fat.

Ginger Snaps.

Put in a sauce pan one cupful each of brown sugar, butter, two cupfuls of molasses, two teaspoonfuls of salt, two teaspoonfuls of soda and spice to taste. Boil five minutes then stir in flour to roll at once.

Nellie Maxwell

Valuable Rubbish.

The rubbish of New York city is worth about $200,000 a year. The city gathers and carries its rubbish to the scows at the river front. Then a contractor trims the scows and disposes of the litter. This operation costs him about $3,000 a week, or $500 each working day. For the privilege of handling the stuff, and winnowing it for possible goods, the contractor, Celesto Di Maico, pays $1,750 a week, or $90,000 a year, to the city.

COOK FINDS POLE

AMERICAN EXPLORER REACHES NORTH POLE AFTER LONG SEARCH.

REPORT GIVEN CREDENCE

Discovery of Pole Was Made in April, 1908, Says Short Dispatch From Greenland Official—Herald Publishes Statement.

Copenhagen, Denmark, Sept. 1.—That Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the American explorer reached the North Pole in his expedition which has just ended was given full credence here, although the details are lacking of his dash across the ice. A message was received at the Colonial office here this morning via Lerwick, Shetland Islands, announcing that Dr. Cook had reached the Pole, April 21, 1908. This dispatch was sent by a Greenland official on board the Danish government Steamer Hans Egede, which passed Lerwick at noon today enroute for Denmark, and read as follows:

"We have on board the American traveler, Dr. Cook, who has reached the North Pole, April 21, 1908. Mr. Cook arrived at Upernavik in May, 1909 from Cape York. The Esquimeaux of Cape York confirm Dr Cook's story of his journey."

It is understood that the Danish consul at Lerwick, where the Hans Egede remained for two hours, was officially notified of Cook's success in his attempt to reach the Pole, but that he was bound to secrecy concerning the extent and the nature of the explorer's discoveries. Director Ryberg, the head of the Greenland administration bureau, said tonight that he did not expect to receive any further details of Cook's achievement before the arrival of the Hans Egede at this port, which probably would be Saturday afternoon. The vessel will make no stops on the voyage from Lerwick to Copenhagen.

Paris., Sep. 1.—The Paris edition of the New York Herald this morning publishes a signed statement from Dr. Frederick A. Cook which is dated: "Hans Egedo, Lerwick, Wednesday," on his experiences in the Arctic regions.

"After a prolonged fight with famine and frost," says Dr. Cook, "we have at last succeeded in reaching the North Pole. A highway with an interesting strip of animated nature has been explored and big game haunts located which will delight sportsmen and extend the Eskimo horizon Land has been discovered on which rests the earth's northern most rocks. A triangle 30,000 square miles has been cut out of the terrestial unknown. The expedition was the outcome of a summer's cruise in Arctic seas on the Schooner Bradley, which arrived at the limits of navigation in Smith Sound late in August, 1907. Here conditions were found to launch a venture to the pole. J. R. Bradley liberally supplies from his vessel suitable provisions for local use. My own equipment for emergency served well for every purpose in the Arctic.

"On April 21, we had reached 89 degrees, 59 minutes, 46 seconds. The pole was in sight. We covered the remaining 14 seconds and made final observations. I told the accompanying Eskimos that we had reached the "great nail." Everywhere we turned was south. With a single step we could pass from one side of the earth to the other, from midday to midnight. It last the flag floated to the breezes of the pole. It was April 21, 1908.

"The temperature was minus 38 degrees centigrade, barometer 29.83, latitude 90, as for longitude, it was nothing, as it was but a word.

Although crazy with joy, our spirits began to undergo a feeling of weariness. Next day, after taking all our observations, a sentiment of intense solitude penetrated us while we looked at the horizon. Was it possible that this desolate region without a patch of earth had aroused and ambitious for so many men for so many centuries? There was no ground, only an immensity of dazzling white snow, no living being, no point to break the frightful monotony. On April 23 we started on our return."

MINERS SETTLE GREAT STRIKE.

Conference Between Miners and Officers Has Good Results.

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 1.—The dispute between the miners and operators of the Pittsburg district affecting 18,000 men, 7,000 of whom have been on a strike for over a week, was settled tonight at a conference between the operators and the national executive board members of the United Mine Workers of America, with national President Thomas L. Lewis, of the organization.

TRAINMEN AID STRIKERS.

Pittsburg, Pa., Sept. 1.—Another victory was recorded by the Schoenville strikers today when it was reported that the members of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, employed on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad had refused to bring any more strikebreakers to the Pressed Steel Car company's plant.

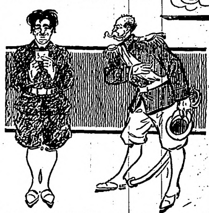
A committee representing the trainmen called at the strikers' headquarters at McKees Rocks and gave out the above information.

UNCLE SAM'S RESERVES IN MOCK ACTION

By Captain Ellis D. Morson

FROM August 9 to to-day the rifle range at Camp Perry, Ohio, has been in constant use. Five distinct tournaments were held with thousands of marksmen, scorers and attendants in camp on the range. The program included the seventh annual matches under the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice; the twenty-seventh annual matches of the National Rifle association; the sixth annual matches of the Ohio State Rifle association; the first annual matches of the Department of the Lakes Rifle association, and the regular annual competition of the Ohio National Guard.

The Ohio National Guard matches were for members of that organization exclusively. They began August 9 and numbered five matches. Immediately following came the Ohio State Rifle matches of the association, which were open only to its members and members of the Ohio National Guard, 13 matches in all. Next in order were the matches of the Ohio State Rifle association, which were open to all comers. They numbered 28, making the total number of matches of the O. S. R. A. 41.



PRESENTING THE FIRST "PRESS TROPHY"

The matches of the Department of the Lakes R. A., which were shot under the direction of the O. S. R. A., numbered six. They were confined to teams and citizens from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan and Kentucky, which states comprise the Department of the Lakes.

Preliminary practice for the national matches began on Friday, August 20, and continued on Saturday. Sunday the range was closed. On Monday, August 23, the national team match was opened and was followed by the national individual rifle match and the national individual pistol match. These matches were completed by Friday, when the National Rifle association matches began. They included 17 matches.

During the period from August 8 to 20 the targets were manned by a brigade of the Ohio National Guard and shooting was in progress from eight till 11:30 a. m., and from one to five o'clock in the afternoon.

During the matches of the National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice and the National Rifle association the range was officered and manned by the U. S. army and the national guard. Markers and scorers were furnished by the army, a regiment being detailed for duty at the range. Teams entering the national match either subsisted themselves or were subsisted at the mess hall.

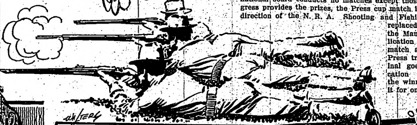
Each competitor was entitled to a cot and mattress and necessary camp furniture, such as stool, wash-basin, water-bucket, tin cup, broom, etc., and ample tentage was furnished, all through the courtesy of the state of Ohio. Competitors supplied their own blankets and bedding other than mattresses.

A careful estimate of the number of men at Camp Perry for the matches included 100 regular army officers, 1,000 enlisted men, U. S. A., team contestants and officers, 900; national guardsmen not attached to teams and civilian rifle club members, 300 to 500; brigade, O. N. G., 500.

The prize list at the matches at Camp Perry was very attractive to riflemen, as the money was largely in excess of any heretofore divided and the prize lists were much larger. In the national team match the prizes were as follows: Class A, $450, $350, $300 and $250; Class B, $350, $250, $225 and $200; Class C, $300, $200, $175 and $150. In addition there was a trophy for each class and every member of the twelve teams received a medal. In the national individual match there were 39 prizes, amounting to $390, with the same number of medals. In the du Pont tyro match, shot under the auspices of the O. S. R. A., the prize money amounted to $400, divided into 42 prizes. The Ohio matches carried from four to 12 or more prizes. As the matches of the National Rifle association were conducted on a percentage basis a great amount of money was divided and the number of the prizes in the big matches was large. In some of the great individual matches, like the Leech cup match, the total prize money approximated $600 and more. All the entrance fees less the actual expense of operating the range were returned to the contestants in the N. R. A. matches. For the national matches Congress furnished the prize money.

With a few exceptions the press championship trophy for rifle shooting, which is contested for each year at the national rifle matches, is the only big trophy of its kind for which newspaper men strive as representatives of their publications and not personally. There are many working newspaper men who are members or ex-members of the national guard and not a few have seen service in the army or navy and in the Spanish war. Among them are some excellent shots, and while the restrictions surrounding the Press cup are such as to prevent members of state teams from competing and thus the number of contestants is curtailed, the contest is always keen and it takes a good score to carry off the cup.



AT 200 YARDS

REVOLVER PRACTICE

This annual contest grew out of a merry jest at Sea Girt some years ago. Each year there gathers at Sea Girt a happy party of newspaper men, who have been attending the New Jersey matches for a number of years. They have a Correspondents' club, which holds annual meetings and of which Leslie R. Fort, son of Governor Fort of New Jersey and publisher of a Lakewood journal, is president. The meetings are now held in the governor's mansion at Sea Girt range. Some years ago as a joke the correspondents decided to have a "press match." As they were considerably out of practice, they shot on a 1,000 yard target at 600 yards. Even at that a majority of the bullets were never located. John Taylor Humphrey, then editor of Shooting and Fishing, won the contest and when the prizes were presented at the club house that year he was handed a battered tin cup by Gen. Bird W. Spencer, who gravely complimented him on his marksmanship. Mr. Humphrey made a suitable response and predicted that out of the match better things would come. He also "filled the cup" according to time honored custom. The following year Mr. Humphrey presented a handsome silver loving cup for the first prize and the New Jersey Rifle association added some cash prizes and an interesting contest was held with about 15 newspaper men as competitors.

The following year the committee on publicity of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice took up the idea of securing a permanent press trophy and through the generosity of one of its members obtained a solid silver loving cup of unusually graceful lines, which was turned over to the National Rifle association. It is inscribed: "Press Trophy—Presented by the National Rifle Association of America as a Perpetual Trophy for rifle competition among the Press of the United States." As the national board conducts no matches except those for which congress provides the prizes, the Press cup match is shot under the direction of the N. R. A. Shooting and Fishing having been replaced by "Arms and the Man," the latter publication gives for this match a replica of the Press trophy. The original goes to the publication represented by the winner, which keeps it for one year. The replica becomes the property of the winner. As the trophy is properly inscribed with the name of the winner, the publication represented and the score, it will in time be a very interesting as well as handsome affair. In addition the National Rifle association gives a life membership to the second man, and there are a number of cash prizes. While the N. R. A. matches follow the national matches and have been shot at Camp Perry for two years past and will be this year, Sea Girt still keeps up the "Press match," for which Arms and the Man provides a cup and the N. J. R. A. the cash prizes. The Illinois State Rifle association and several others have press rifle matches.

ARE BLONDES INFERIOR?

Blonde women in Chicago, judges of the courts and superintendents of two insane asylums disputed the statement of Maj. Charles E. Woodruff, surgeon in the United States army, that blondes are morally and physically the inferiors of brunettes. They also attacked his assertion that blondes make up a greater portion of the population of jails and similar institutions.

Dr. Woodruff reached his conclusions after he had completed an inspection of the prisons and asylums in New York state and city. He declared these institutions in New York are full of blonde persons who, owing to their nervous temperament, are unable to struggle for existence in a climate to which they are unfitted and have fallen into poverty, disease and crime.

Dr. Woodruff contends that the excess of sunshine in America breaks down the nervous system of blondes, morally as well as physically, and makes them peculiarly liable to the ravages of consumption and other deadly ailments.

"Such may be the case in New York, but it is not so in Chicago," one angry society woman, who is a pronounced blonde, declared. "I am sure we are just as good and some of us better than the brunettes. Our divorce courts will show that."

"I will have to deny Dr. Woodruff's theory," declared Judge Theodore Brentano. "In the first place, you see, Mrs. Brentano is a blonde. Judging from the standard in my home I do not think much of Dr. Woodruff's ideas. In my experience on the bench, although I have not paid any particular attention to the complexion of the prisoners before me, I believe there have been as many dark persons sent to jail as blondes, if not more.

"As to divorces, I am sure I cannot say whether most of those who figured in them were blondes or brunettes. I think they have been about equally divided."

Mrs. Theodore Brentano, wife of the jurist, expressed the sentiments of her husband.

"I do not see why difference in complexion should have anything to do with morality," she declared.

"In my experience in the criminal court and as a police magistrate I have tried hundreds of men and women," said Judge George Kersten. "The charges ranged from disorderly conduct to murder. I never noted whether the offenders were of light or dark complexion. I consider one as good as the other."

Investigation at two insane institutions, Dunning and the state hospital for insane at Elgin, failed to uphold the theory of Dr. Woodruff.

"Of course I cannot state positively offhand whether there are more blondes than brunettes confined in this institution," said Supt. Wilhite of Dunning. "I do not think, however, that there is any difference in the numbers. I will say, though, that I have found the light-complexioned inmates inclined to be of more nervous temperament than the dark patients."

"It may be true of the jails and insane institutions in New York," commented Dr. Podstata, superintendent of the state hospital for the insane at Elgin, Ill. "I have not found such to be the case at this institution. There are as many patients here of dark complexion as there are blondes."

Of 253 convicts in Clinton prison, whom he observed, Dr. Woodruff states that 19 had very light hair, 61 had light brown hair, 61 dark brown hair and 112 had darker shades. The doctor maintained that this is far above the true average of blondes. Of nearly 5,000 men admitted to the Elmira reformatory Dr. Woodruff found 318 blondes, 90 with red hair, 103 with sandy, 1,203 with light brown hair, 1,449 with dark brown hair, 1,406 with black.

He concludes that unless the blonde American finds some better means of survival than he has at present he will be wiped out, as a type, in favor of the brunette.

Home in Sun for Harriman

A physician's prescription which costs $30,000 to fill may seem a bit high, even in these days of luxury, but if you happen to possess more millions than you have fingers and toes and then a good many more you may not mind the expense any more than E. H. Harriman does.

Several months ago the financier's physician decided his patient was not getting enough sunlight and so he prescribed a solarium or sun room, on the top of the new Harriman home, at Fifth avenue and Sixty-ninth street, New York. The financier looked at the prescription and turned it over to his architect, Grosvenor Atterbury, 20 West Forty-third street. Mr. Atterbury, in turn, called in Julius Peabody, one of the cleverest of his staff, and together they drew the plans.

The solarium will occupy the entire top of the house and will comprise a sunroom, two bedrooms, two bathrooms and a sitting room. Each will be so arranged that it can practically be made an open-air room, or so shielded that rain will be excluded and air permitted to enter in event of bad weather. Then, by an arrangement of shades and blinds the sun's rays may be governed so that the temperature will be kept even.

The sunroom proper will extend across the Fifth avenue side of the building and will be 48x35 feet inside measure. Looking up from Central park, the effect will be that of a greenhouse, as the entire side will be inclosed with windows. Along the Sixty-ninth street side will be a dozen windows opening into the sunroom, sitting room, and bedrooms.

In the center of the sunroom will be a skylight 12x12 feet. This will be constructed of glass heavy enough to withstand the most severe storms and so arranged that it may be opened or closed. The idea is to keep it open in pleasant weather that air may be admitted.

As the walls from the cornice to the main flat roof project inward at an angle of 45 degrees, the distance from the floor to the ceiling will not be as great at the sides of the rooms as in the center. At the sides the walls will measure 10 feet six inches.

One of the novelties will be an interior porch. This will be built on the Sixty-ninth street side of the sunroom and will be 14x8 feet. It will be such a porch as one might find at the entrance to a summer house and will permit a view of Sixty-ninth street and Central park and a bit of Fifth avenue. As the sun apartments are 65 feet above the pavement the view will be magnificent. Moreover, the air at this distance from the pavement is free from dust and exceptionally fresh.

It is the idea to make a sort of conservatory out of the porch. Plants may be grown here and it is likely many rare blooms will be cultivated. Enough sun will be admitted to develop orchids and ripen grapes. As a heating apparatus will be installed the chill blasts of winter cannot injure the plants. Nor can the hot suns of summer burn them, for the shades and blinds may be drawn and the cooling plant set to work.

When the improvements are completed Harriman can practically live out of doors among the most beautiful of flowers if he chooses. He can have all the sun there is without leaving his home and he can take the fresh-air sleeping cure if he sees fit. With the skylight and windows open he will be out of doors to all intents and purposes and far enough from the street to sleep undisturbed by city noises. Even the air from the park will suggest the country.

SPANISH CENTER OF UNREST

Barcelona, near the northeast corner of Spain, is the center of the Spanish trade-union movement. Lee Merriwether thus quotes a Barcelona labor leader: "Dyers of woolens and calicoes have so strong a union that they have succeeded in raising their wages to four pesetas (78 cents) a day and in forcing their employers to recognize their organization. Trades not large enough in membership to form a separate union combine in the 'Seccion Varia,' composed of many trades. This union is gaining strength and taking up new questions from time to time. Organizations are strongest in Barcelona, hence it is here that the best wages are paid. For instance, stevedores here receive seven pesetas ($1.36) for a day of eight hours. In Bilbao and other ports lacking organization one or two pesetas is the rule."

Mr. Merriwether writes: "In the shop windows of Barcelona are cheap chromos which show the incoming tide of public opinion. One represents an arch, the keystone of which is a king in robes of purple. From the mouth of the king come the words: 'I govern all.' Beneath the king is a gay cavalier with sword and plume and jaunty cap. The cavalier is saying: 'I command all.' Beneath the cavalier is a priest, prayer book in hand, saying: 'I pray for all.' Then comes the judge, pompous and well fed: 'I live upon you all.' Then the beggar, one-legged, hat in hand: 'I beg from all.' Last of all, with brawny shoulders and straining muscles, standing like two columns supporting the arch, are two men representing labor: 'We support all.'"

People of Barcelona, says Mr. Merriwether, "have a spring and alertness about them that makes it difficult to believe they are of the same country and race as the slow-going, sleepy Andalusians. Even Paris cannot boast of a livelier or more charming boulevard than Barcelona's Rambla. Wider than Pennsylvania avenue in Washington, the Rambla contains a broad walk in the center for pedestrians, with a row of shade trees and a wide driveway on either side of the broad walk, then two more trottoirs or sidewalks on both sides of the driveways."

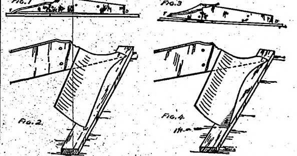
MOLDBOARD DIVIDES PLOW INTO DIFFERENT CLASSES

So Important Is the Exact Shape That the Manufacturers Find it Necessary to Make Moldboard in Three Layers.

There are many different kinds of plows, but they may all be divided into three types, according to the shape of the moldboard. One is the sod plow, with the long sloping moldboard, which turns the sod clear over. The second has a moldboard of medium slope, which turns the furrow upon edge, but does not throw it entirely over. The third type is a bluff moldboard, which turns the furrow up and thoroughly pulverizes it.

Ground can be well plowed only when it will pulverize thoroughly. If it turns up in chunks and cakes the land is not properly underdrained. Many farmers are finding that their tiled fields are not completely drained and are putting in new strings of tile between the old ones.

The plow bottom is the part of the implement that does the work. Turn the plow upon its back and look across the bottom, put a straightedge lengthwise upon the bottom or sole of an old plow and of a new one and find whether the shares dip down at the point. If the point dips down as the plow stands in the furrow, the point would of course turn up when the plow is inverted, and the straightedge will touch the point of the share and the heel of the landside, but there will be a space of about 3-16 of an inch between the straightedge and the landside, where the latter joins the share (E, figure 1). This dipping down of the point is to make the plow go in the ground and it is called the suction of the plow. The plow as it comes from the factory should be and generally is constructed so that it floats freely in the ground, cutting a uniform furrow of the depth for which the plow is adjusted. If a walking-plow requires to be forcibly tilted or held in a certain position there is something the matter with the implement. In the riding-plow the suction should be twice as great as in the walking-plow. The suction or dip of the point is almost always right in the new plow.



Various Parts of a Plow.

After the plow has been used for some time the point often gets worn off or "snubbed up," so that a straightedge laid upon the bottom of the plow as before would rock over the middle (figure 6). Such a plow cannot be made to stay at the proper depth in the ground without materially increasing the draft. It is supposed that this section will be corrected by the blacksmith when he sharpens the share, but all smiths do not give the share point the correct dip. It is important to see that this is done. It will pay well in the saving of horseflesh and the securing of good work to apply the straightedge to an old plow every few weeks and find out whether the suction is right.

The accompanying pictures show the difference in suction between a plow as it comes from the factory and one with the point worn off. In figure 1 the point has the proper dip and in figure 2 it has no dip at all, but turns up instead. The curve of the point is exaggerated in each cut, that the idea may appear the plainer.

The point of the plow, as it comes from the factory, turns into the land about 3-16 of an inch, in either a walking-plow or a riding-plow; that is, if the straightedge is placed upon the landside, one end touching the heel of the landside, there will be 3-16 of an inch space between the straightedge and the landside at the connection with the share. The point needs to be thus turned to draw the plow into the land and this sidewise curve of the point is called the land or landing of the plow.

The wing of the share—that is, the point farthest away from the landside (W. figure 4), should have a bearing surface in a walking plow to hold up that side of the plow and enable it to run freely and keep level without the plowman pushing upon the handles. This bearing surface (B, figure 3) should extend back 1¼ inches from the corner of the share. When the wing wears off, leaving but a small bearing surface upon the bottom of the furrow at that corner, as in figure 4, it allows the plow to tip toward the furrow. In a riding plow the bearing surface at the wing is decreased, giving the share much greater angle at that point. This bearing surface is not needed to hold the riding-plow level, because it is loaded on wheels and supported in a rigid position so it cannot tip. In sharpening the share of a walking-plow it is important to see that sufficient bearing surface is given to the wing.

The plow, as it comes from the factory, has exactly the right curve to the moldboard and share and if the angle at which the furrow strikes the face of the plow is changed by the hitch or by holding plow at an unusual angle, it will not do its best work in the easiest way. So important is the exact shape of the plow that the manufacturers find it necessary to make the moldboard and share in three layers (a soft center, with a hardened layer on each side) to prevent these surfaces from getting out of shape when the steel is tempered; and hence the necessity for keeping the suction, land and wing of the plow in the original shape, so that it will not be necessary to tilt the share and thus change the angle at which it strikes the furrow.

When the plow is sharpened a piece of steel should be added (if the point has worn off much) and the point brought out to its former length. If the farmer will make a record of the length of the share point when the plow is new and measure it again after the blacksmith has sharpened it, he will be able to know (and to tell the smith) whether the point has been brought out to the proper length. Those blacksmiths who thoroughly understand sharpening a plow will at once recognize the importance of these adjustments. The hammering of the point should be done on the under side and not upon the face of the plow. The better class of smiths seldom hammer the face of the plow.

POTATO COVERER AND YARD SCRAPER

Contrivance Made of 2-Inch Lumber Can Also Be Used for Leveling Rough Ground.

Besides its use in the barnyard, this is handy for covering potatoes, leveling rough ground, filling ditches, etc. It should be made of two-inch lumber, and hard wood if possible; the scraper should be six to eight feet long, and two feet high; its life will be prolonged if shod with a piece of iron or steel, as shown; however, it will do good work without the iron. The evener must be at least four feet from scraper, to allow for load, and to keep same from under the horses' feet. A very large barnyard may be cleaned in a short time, and several loads of manure saved. Simply drive the load where wanted, lift scraper up by the handles, leaving load, and repeat the operation.

Fresh Water Farming.

We think of farming as a dry-land business. It is a fact, however, that an acre of water can be made to yield more food than acre of land, said Dean L. H. Bailey, director of the New York State College of Agriculture at Cornell university.

"There are tens of thousands of acres of fresh water in New York state, and a great expanse of salt water. In time, we shall cultivate these fresh waters and the sea shores. The man who owns or has the use of a lake or pond will in the future find it to be valuable agricultural property. We shall breed domestic varieties of fish as we do pigs or poultry.

Some of the European peoples are doing this now. At present we are stocking our streams and lakes for sportsmen. As competition increases, however, we must stock the ponds in the same spirit as we stock our pastures. We have passed the hunting stage with cattle and sheep. We shall then come to a scientific development and utilization of water fields."

It is an interesting fact that the suggestion by Dean Bailey regarding the economic use of the streams, lakes and ponds of the state as sources of food supply is directly in line with the views expressed by Seth Green and Fred Mather over 35 years ago. When the latter, in a published interview, recommended the stocking of farm ponds with food fish he was regarded as an enthusiast, and much of the labor of Green has been negatived. Now that the state agricultural college has taken up the matter seriously, the dreams of these early fish culturists may come to be realized.

Handling Silage.

We have used an improved silage cutter with blower, a machine of great capacity, with only one fault, namely, that the knives are hard to set, but with the great advantage that it cuts one-quarter inch pieces, says a writer in Baltimore American. These pack best in the silo, because of their small size, and because of close packing they keep better than if larger. They are also better to mix with cut hay and grain, since there is very little waste of uneven parts, such as cornstalk joints, in the manger.

Farmers able to do so should hold their grain until later in the fall. As soon as threshing commences there is a heavy movement of grain to the terminals, and the inrush is of itself sufficient to depress the price. There are indications of a fair price for wheat, and the farmer who is not compelled to sell at once can take to himself some of the profit usually going to the commission men.

He had it finished and sealed, but while licking a postage stamp it fell from his fingers to the floor and lighted on the back of a passing cockroach, where it stuck. He had not seen the cockroach, but what he did see was his escaped postage stamp zigzaging aimlessly across the floor and up the wall. In depressed silence he at once tore up the letter and exclaimed: "Two week! H—l! I wont be out of here in three years."

Inasmuch as Ormsby left North Dakota at least half a dozen years ago, spending several years in the national capital and some time in the state of Washington it is evident that it takes a long time for the Dakota climate to seriously affect the vocal cords. However, talking too much is constitutional with McHarg and his associations with standpat influences have made him out of touch with Roosevelt, as well as Taft, policies.

St. Paul, Sept. 6—Whatever he may do elsewhere it seems to be anticipated that President Taft will not talk politics during his visit to St. Paul. He is to be here on the 18th of September. The arrangements for his reception indicate that he is to be greeted not as the head of the Republican party, but as the President of the United States; and, considering the character of the committees appointed, it is difficult to see how he can defend the tariff, urge the regulation of railroads, the control of corporation, or take sides on any other matter of public policy without giving just cause of offense to some one or other of those who have been selected as his hosts.

approval of that abandonment of the Roosevelt policies which has evidently been decided upon by the reactionary forces behind the Taft administration Under cover of a new-born enthusiasm for tariff reform Senator Clapp has taken pains to ingratiate himself with the enemies of the Roosevelt policies by his persistent opposition to the corporation tax, about all that is left of them in the administration policy. People here are inclined to overlook Senator Clapp's course in this regard, in view of the fact that in regard to other matters contained in the tariff bill he appeared to stand shoulder to shoulder with Senator Nelson and followed the course laid down by Cummins and La Follette. In the East however it is different. Senator Clapp is judged in Washington not by his opposition to the schedules of the Payne bill, but by his loyalty to the corporations as is indicated by the fight he made against the provision which will compel these corporations to pay millions annually into the federal treasury. Let those who are being sent Senator Clapp's speeches, tens of thousands which are being distributed thruout the state study them vith this in mind. They will find that in regard to every other matter except the corporation tax Senator Clapp contented himself with vague generalizations. When he spoke of this tax he was specific. The whole of one speech he made was devoted to denunciation of the corporation tax, and the half of another. He always recurred to it. On the other hand Senator Clapp in all his speeches, so far as I have been able to find, has not suggested a single amendment which would relieve the people of any part of the burdens imposed by the Payne bill.

The Attack on Kellogg

Concurrently with the effort to advertise Clapp as the head and front of the opposition to the Payne bill there has been a systematic campaign conducted against Frank Kellogg, who, because he was known to enjoy Mr. Roosevelt's policies, and not because he himself had made any effort in that direction, for up to the present time he has organized no campaign, was regarded by many in this state as the fittest person to send to the senate to aid in their crystallization into law. The Clapp papers began against him a campaign of the most unwarranted detraction. Clapp's friends began talking against him. The federal office holders busied themselves in ridiculing his supposed pretentions, and one of them is said even to have used threats against Mr. Kellogg himself. It is not surprising therefore that, on the other hand, Mr. Kellogg's friends should have joined with Mr. Tawney to tender a demonstration intended to be the launching of the Clapp boom abortive. They have succeeded.

The Senatorial Squabble

Indeed it is generally believed that in this Kellogg and Tawney have pooled their issues. While Tawney's first purpose is, of course, to secure his re-election to the house, which in view of his prominence in congress, his service to the dairymen of the state and the imminent need they have of his further help, and his general efficiency, is far from improbable, there are indications that later he may become the candidate of the administration Republicans for the senate. In that event, and in the event of others entering the fight, which is more than likely, the situation becomes one of unusual interest and the developments will be well worth watching. The more so as the indications now are that the legislative campaign will be carried on new lines. The reform forces within the Republican party have been gathering strength, and the temperance people especially are perfecting an unusually strong organization. That the tonnage [illegible] some figure and that those who favor it will work with the advocates of temperance reform, seems reasonably assured. So that, on the whole, we are promised in 1910 an unusually strenuous campaign, and one which is bound to have an important bearing on the future political history of the state.

Politicians Gathering

It happens just at this time we are to have the State fair in St. Paul, and while the prospects are that it will be more than usually forth seeing for itself, the occasion will be utilized by politicians to meet, discuss the situation, and make plans for the future. Leading men throughout the state are, it is known, looking forward to next week with more than usual interest not unmixed with anxiety. It is felt by Republicans that the future of the party is at stake, and that, if they are ever to wrest it from the hands of a Democratic administration the time to act is now. It is not Johnson only that they fear. They realize that in its present disorganized condition, and having to bear the onus of an unpopular tariff which is certain to be the most prominent issue of the campaign Republican success against any popular Democratic candidate for governor is by no means assured, and that unless heroic measures are taken more than half the seats in congress are likely to be lost. This more especially is true because of the facts which the agitation for the demonstration have elicited. The rank and file of the Republican party, it is feared can not again be induced to give their confidence to men who supported Cannon, and who voted for the iniquitous Payne bill as it came from the house, even if to carry favor at home, they turned their coats at the eleventh hour. With the ship subsidy bill looming up as an issue they are determined to have real representatives in congress and not party slaves.

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential.
Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the Local.
Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.
The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments.
The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, eases nervous excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

S.S.S. CURES SKIN DISEASES

There is an evaporation from the body going on continually, day and night, through the pores and glands of the skin. This is nature's way of maintaining the proper temperature of our systems and preserving the softness and flexibility of the skin, and so long as the blood is free from impurities no trouble will result. When, however, the blood from any cause becomes infected with humors and acids, these too must be expelled, and coming in contact with the delicate fibres and tissues with which the skin is so abundantly supplied they produce irritation and inflammation, and the effect is shown by Eczema, Acne, Tetter, and skin affections of various kinds. These impurities and humors get into the blood through a deranged or inactive condition of the system; the members whose duty it is to carry off the waste and refuse matter of the body fail to properly perform their work, and this impure, fermenting matter is left in the system to be absorbed by the blood. The skin is not only affected by poisons generated within the system, but poisons from without, such as Poison Oak, Poison Ivy, Nettle Rash, etc., enter through the open pores and glands, and so thoroughly do they become rooted in the blood that they are ever present, or return at certain seasons of each year to torment the sufferer. Salves, washes, lotions, etc., cannot cure skin diseases. True, such treatment relieves some of the itching and discomfort, and aids in keeping the skin clean, but it does not reach the real cause, and at best can be only palliating and soothing. A thorough cleansing of the blood is the only certain cure for skin diseases. S. S. S., a gentle acting, safe blood purifier, made entirely of vegetable ingredients of the forest and field, is the proper treatment. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation, and neutralizes the acids and humors, thoroughly cleansing and purifying the blood, and curing skin affections of every kind. It supplies to the blood the fresh, nutritive qualities necessary to sustain the skin and all other parts of the body, and rids the blood of any and all poisons. S. S. S. cures Eczema, Tetter, Acne, Salt Rheum, Poison Oak and Ivy, Nettle Rash, and all other skin troubles, and cures them permanently by removing every trace of the cause from the blood. Special book on Skin Diseases and any medical advice desired furnished free to all who write.

I have used your S. S. S., spring and fall, for the past two years, with the result that it entirely relieved me of a form of Eczema which my doctor was unable to cure. My arms, lower limbs, and, in fact, the biggest portion of my whole body was affected, and when I first began S. S. S. the itching, etc., was worse, but I continued the remedy with the result that the dry, itching eruption entirely disappeared. I think a great deal of your medicine, and have recommended it to others with good results. It is the best blood medicine made, and I can conscientiously recommend it for the cure of all blood and skin affections. CHAS. HORSTMAN.

Tickling or dry coughs will quickly loosen when using Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy. And it is so thoroughly harmless that Dr. Shoop tells mothers to use nothing else, even for very young babies. The wholesome green leaves and tender stems of a lung healing and mountainous shrub give the curative properties to Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy. It calms the cough, heals the sensitive bronchial membranes. No opium, no chloroform nothing harsh used to injure or suppress. Demand Dr. Shoop's. Accept no other. Sold by all dealers.

It's a pity when sick ones drug the stomach or stimulate the heart and kidneys. That is all wrong. A weak stomach means weak stomach nerves, always. And this is also true of the heart and kidneys. The weak nerves are instead crying out for help. This explains why Dr. Shoop's Restorative is promptly helping stomach heart and kidney ailments. The Restorative reaches out for the actual cause of these ailments—the failing "inside nerves." Anyway test the Restorative 48 hours. It won't cure so soon as that, but you will surely know that help is coming. Sold by all dealers.

THE MODERN WAY

Milking Time on an Up-to-date Minnesota Dairy Farm.

The milking machine which has been in existence as an experiment for some time, has now passed the experimental stage and in the future will be one of the necessary acquisitions to all well regulated farms. Not a little interest has been manifested in the machine or plant, which has been installed by the Riverside Stock Farm near Argyle recently, and many who are contemplating adding such an improvement, including the impuisitive, have been out to look it over.

To those who are not familiar with such a contrivance we will try to explain briefly its mecanism. Power is the first consideration, and for which purpose a gasoline engine is used. The engine runs a hydraulic pump which is connected with a vacuum reservoir. From this reservoir lead pipes lead to the cow barn and extend along in front of the cows on either side. At interval points the pipes are supplied with air cocks. When milking time comes a can is placed between two cows, and a hose from the can to the air cock above mentioned, is adjusted, which consequently sucks all the air from the can. The suckers are then placed on the cow's teats, four at a time on each cow. These suckers resemble very much a telephone receiver, the teats being tenderly held by the soft rubber around the hole in the end. When everything is adjusted the air cock is turned and the milk takes the place of the vacuum in the can. The continuous flow which might be imagined is regulated to even draws at systematic intervals by a small valve which works automatically on the can and gives the same effect as a human hand drawing the milk by regular squeezes. When the milk is free from the udder the valves draw in the air and the suckers are released from the teats. It takes the machine about three minutes to milk four cows at one time. We might mention that the cows seem to enjoy the sensation caused by the regular motion of the machine and the most nervous cows do not mind it in the least.

There are thirty milking cows on the Riverside Farm of the Ayrshire breed, and the sight at milking time is well worth a couple of hours of any man's time to go out and see them. Mr. Holcomb, the proprietor of the farm, says that he will now double the number of his herd since he has installed the machine.—Argyle Banner.

THIEF RIVER FALLS

Farmers living on the east side of the river in the town of North are figuring upon constructing a four mile ditch to drain that section. They will not petition for a county ditch, but each farmer will contribute a certain amount and the work will be given to some reliable contractor to do. It is estimated the cost will be in the neighborhood of $2,000.

The Wise's house looked homelike to the long legged bird that hovered overhead. Favorably impressed, he softly deposited on the steps, his wee burden of blessedness.

The Wise's pleasure at the Stork's thoughtfulness was tempered by Mrs. Wise's following illness and her inability to provide nourishment for the Blessing.

It looked as tho the precious gift might be taken away.

Putting One Past the Post

By JOHN IRVING DAY

Garnering the Gold by a Special Process Originated Within the Confines of the High Rollers' Club

DOCK FLOYD, Jack Cleland and Col. Powley of the High Rollers' club set out from Reno, Nev., for San Francisco. They became acquainted with a George Hopkins, interested in Raw Hide mining properties.

• • •

Doc Floyd sat in the marble-finished rotunda of San Francisco's best hotel the morning after his arrival. He had finished with his newspaper and was gazing out upon the little park across the street filled with palms and beds of bright-hued flowers. Neither Col. Powley nor Jack Cleland had appeared, and he was rather glad when the young mining man he had met on the train came upon him, and he was roused from his self-absorption by a cheery greeting. Looking up, he saw that young Hopkins no longer wore corduroys and heavy hunting boots, but was blue-serged, green-hatted and patent-leathered, and altogether sporty looking enough to belong to his own set.

"All alone, I see," remarked Hopkins as he touched Floyd upon the shoulder. "If you've not been to breakfast, I'd like to have you join me."

"I'd be pleased to," assented Floyd, who had grown hungry waiting for his friends. "These fellows who came with me must be taking an extra portion of sleep this morning. I'll not wait any longer for them."

Down in the grillroom a breakfast was served, the equal of which is not to be had in any other city in the United States, excepting, perhaps, New Orleans. By the time Floyd and Hopkins had lit their cigarettes they were conversing as old friends.

"Oh, look who's arrived!" burst out Tony the Tout, upon catching sight of Floyd and his party. "If it isn't the Big Doctor, and I haven't seen him since Hamburg was a two-year-old."

"Hello, Tony," answered Floyd, smiling at the rough enthusiasm of his old race track acquaintance. "Never thought I'd have the pleasure of running into you out here."

"Quit your kiddin' and save that smooth talk, because you'll need it in this bunch. These native sons have a brand of salve that'll make yours go some if you want to keep tho' runnin' gear of business greased. Now that you've got here, I saw you first and you're my meal ticket, so don't forget it. It's 'our bankroll,' and we are going to do the betting—not just you alone, but We, Us & Co."

"That's all right. I'll see to that part of it. I've got a bird here in the first race that'll make all the others look like a lot of pug dogs chasing a jack rabbit. We'll start in light, though, and run our bank roll up. Buy a ticket for fifty on this one. If any of these other hustlers try to put the bee on you, just give me the 'Hey, Rube,' and I'll be there to shoo them away."

Tony, while not keeping too close to Floyd and making a nuisance of himself, still kept within safe call, watching him as a hen would watch a chicken. True to his word, he directed the small amount of betting that was done during the afternoon, except that Floyd would not plunge as Tony hoped to have him do. After the last race of the day, the happy tout was given a percentage of the winnings and in thankful tones told Floyd that it was the first real money he had possessed in weeks. He could now see his way clear to pay room rent, long overdue, and purchase railroad transportation back to the east when the racing season came to an end.

"And say," whispered Tony, in confidential tones, "find out to-night what business that young man who was with you this afternoon has with old Tom Camp. They were off in a corner for a long time and if your friend ain't some wise fish he's apt to be bit."

The one to whom Tony alluded was George Hopkins. He had seen the young mining man with Floyd, and presuming him to be an old friend, was taking steps to warn him of any deal that he might have on with one Thomas Camp, owner, trainer and believed-to-be backer of books on the track where he ran his own horses. Several times Camp had come dangerously near to being ruled off the turf for queer-looking races, but some secret pull had seemed to save him each time.

That night after dinner Floyd, in conversation with young Hopkins, cautiously led the talk up to Tom Camp, and then asked the flat-footed question as to whether Hopkins had entered or was about to enter into any deal.

"Well, I'm rather ashamed of it, because it does look like a crooked deal," returned Hopkins; "but I'm a lot loser on the game, first and last, and it looks like a chance to get even, so I was going to take it. If you know anything about Camp, you know he has some of the best horses on the track. He says he's been in hard luck this winter and lost several thousand dollars bucking the faro bank. His proposition is for me to put in $5,000 to help back a book. He will put in $5,000 of his own money, making a good strong bank roll. The books are all making money now, and besides the even break we would get in on the regular play; Camp says he can fix a race or two so we can win some sure money. He is certain that we can pull out $25,000 each in a week."

"That all listens well," broke in Floyd.

"What's the matter with it?" questioned Hopkins. "I don't know why I'm telling you all this, anyway. You might queer my game for all I know."

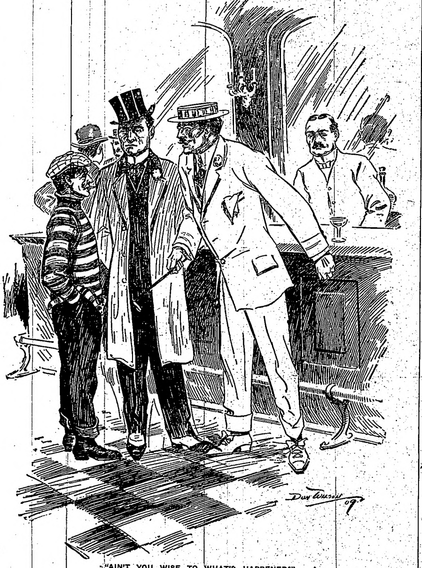
"No, I'll do nothing of the kind," answered Floyd. "But I'll bet you five hundred now that if I don't save you, Camp will trim you for whatever you put in. If it's such a sure thing, what does he want with a partner to share the profits? Any time a man offers you something for nothing, lock up your bank roll and keep your hand on your jewelry. Do you follow me?"

"Yes, it does look that way," assented Hopkins; "but you see he needs $10,000 to make the book safe, and he only has about $5,000 in ready money that he can lay his hands on. That's why he wants some one to come in with the other $5,000."

"That's just what they all say, and now I'm convinced that you are scheduled to be the goat," announced Floyd. "Did he explain to you just how he was going to pull off one of those alleged 'sure things?'"

"Yes, there's a race on the card to-morrow in which he has a horse entered that can win. He also controls the only other contender in the race. He can throw the race to whichever horse he wants to. You know that's possible, don't you?"

"Yes, I've seen such things done, and then again I've seen them fall most awfully hard. I can see now how easy it will be for him to break the book and get your $5,000 on one race. Come on up to my rooms and I'll initiate you into the art of beating the double cross, if there's any chance to do it; and if there isn't then you'd better keep your $5,000 in the bank, or have a trustee appointed to look after it for you. You may be all right on a mining proposition, but there are a lot of other things you've got to learn."



"AIN'T YOU WISE TO WHAT'S HAPPENED?"

Within 15 minutes Floyd, with the aid of the telephone, had located Tony the Tout, and in another half hour that wise bug of the turf had arrived at Floyd's rooms, wondering for what he was wanted, and pleased all over to be summoned into the presence of so august a personage.

To Tony Floyd told the proposition of Camp as Hopkins had told it to him, and upon hearing the proposition Tony let out a long laugh.

"Why, it's just a plain game of double cross," asserted Tony. "He'll break the book and get your $5,000 in one race and then tell you it was all a mistake and make you believe it, and then he'll ask you to dig up another $5,000 to get even with. Why, my kid brother wouldn't bite on that old hook."

"Yes, do you suppose I didn't know all that?" broke in Floyd with a motion for the talkative Tony to shut up. "What I want you for is to see if we can turn the tables and get Camp's end of the bank roll."

"I'm afraid not," answered Tony. "He's worked that game four or five times this season and always gets away with it. He's got a regular crew to go on and make the book and they all stand in with the play. I suppose he's told Mr. Hopkins that he can put a man in the box to look out for his interests?"

"Yes, he said I could do that," assented the young mining man.

"Let's look over that race he said he could fix for to-morrow," was the sudden suggestion of Tony as he produced a paper in which was a list of the entries for the next day's races. "Oh, I've got the old badger!" was the sudden, gleeful outburst. "He was right about there being just two horses in the race with a chance to win. Go on and put in the $5,000 with him and I'll attend to the rest when I see you at the track to-morrow. Just put a wise one in the box to see that no one runs away with the bank roll, and after that race we'll have old Camp ready to take the high dive from the top of the ferry boat."

"What is it you're going to do?" was the suspicious inquiry of Hopkins.

"Never mind what I'm going to do; the Big Doctor will stand for what I say, won't you, Doc?"

"Yes. I don't know what it is, but if you are sure you can put it through I'll take all, or half, of Hopkins' end of the $5,000. I'll give Hopkins $2,500 in the morning for a half of his interest and he needn't let Camp know there is any one else in on the deal. Jack Cleland can be the man in the box as lookout."

When Floyd arrived at the race track on the day following his talk with Hopkins and Tony he saw a new bookmaker's stand in the line under the shed of the betting ring. In this stand was seated Jack Cleland, who was supposed to be there as an assistant to the cashier, but no glance of recognition passed between the two. Floyd and Hopkins also kept apart during the afternoon, having agreed to meet in a secluded spot on the grounds just before the race in which Camp had announced that a trick was to be turned.

"Are you sure of that tout?" was the anxious inquiry of Hopkins when he and Floyd finally met in consultation.

"Yes, he'd lose both legs sooner than throw me down," was the reply. "Now, what does Camp say?"

"He says he has instructed the book to take in all the bets they can get on Applejack. He has arranged with the owner of that one to lose and he will win with his own horse, Lemon Squeezer. He explains that it might be suspicious to the judges if he didn't win this race."

"That means," explained Floyd, "that he intends that Applejack is to win and his horse will be beaten out. How much money have you got in your pocket?"

"Oh, about $500."

"Well, go in the ring and make five $100 bets on Lemon Squeezer, but don't bet it in our book. Camp has given instructions to his bookmakers to give a shade the best price on the other fellow's horse. He will have commissioners there to get his own money down quick and bet enough to win out the bank roll on that one race. That's the way he's got it fixed to win our $5,000."

The two separated and entered the betting ring from different ends of that inclosure. Floyd noticed that, true to his prediction, the new partnership book had put up 2 to 1 on Applejack while the other books were laying a shade less than that price. A moment afterwards he noticed that the partnership bookmaker rubbed out the price against Applejack, announcing that he had all he wanted of it. Floyd knew by this sign that Camp had bet enough of his own money to win out the money that was in the book. Walking quietly through the ring, he stopped long enough before a number of books to make several good-sized wagers on Lemon Squeezer. He already had given Tony $1,000 to wager on the same horse.

Thomas Camp, besides getting all the money to be had in his own book, also had wagered hundreds on Applejack in other books about the ring, and was surprised to note when he returned from the paddock, where he had just saddled his horse and given final instructions to the jockey, that the price against Lemon Squeezer, his own horse, had not gone up in the betting. He was unaware that a large amount of money bet by Floyd had forced the price down. He had no time to investigate, however, as the horses already were at the post, and he hurried to a point of vantage from which he could view the race.

Across the track in the infield Tony the Tout and Hank Harlin, owner of Applejack, stood talking together. Doc Floyd, watching the pair through his fieldglasses from the grandstand, saw Tony pass a small package of bookmakers' tickets to Harlin.

"They're off!" came the buzzing cry of the crowd in chorus as the barrier over at the three-quarter pole whizzed up and a field of eight horses leaped forward. The blue and white striped jacket and cap of Applejack showed in front, while next in order and close behind came Lemon Squeezer, both horses running easily. Before they had gone a quarter of the distance it could be seen that the race was between the first two horses, and the others were strung out in single file. In the stretch came Applejack, running without effort, with Lemon Squeezer within safe call. A smile of contentment rested upon the face of Tom Camp, down at the end of the grandstand, while Floyd's countenance wore a worried look and young Hopkins was shivering in the excitement of lost hope.

"There, and I listened to you and your tout," he said to Floyd as he saw Applejack winning easily.

"Why, it's nothing more than a procession," muttered Floyd. "And I would have staked my right eye on Tony. Why, that boy on Applejack is racing him to death to win and the other fellow don't seem to be trying."

"Applejack wins!" shouted the crowd as the blue and white stripes passed under the wire a good length in front of Lemon Squeezer.

"That's one time that I'm the goat," muttered Doc Floyd to Hopkins. "I'm sorry I steered you wrong, and will get you even. Although I guess I'm in a few thousand deeper than you are, I know I gave you the wrong steer and am sorrier for that than losing my own money. We are whipsawed for fair. Camp wins out the bank roll in the book and we lose our outside bets. Come on and let's get a bottle of wine. No use crying over spilt milk now."

The two men, drinking large glasses of wine at the bar, paid slight attention to a sudden cheering and commotion on the outside.

"I guess we put over a good one that time, didn't we?"

Floyd looked around upon the smiling face of Tony.

"Why, you young hound, I ought to break your head with this bottle," he said in low but dangerously threatening tones.

"What's the matter, pal? Ain't you wise to what's happened?"

"No, what is it?" broke in young Hopkins, anxiously.

"Why, Applejack was disqualified for not having up enough weight. Somehow or other Hank Harlin was careless in putting his lead pads to make the extra weight along with the saddle, and the jockey lost ten pounds of lead while he was at the post. Careless of Hank, wasn't it? He's been looking for a chance to double cross Camp and fell for my little scheme when I told him how much money we would bet for him on the other horse."

"And then we've won in the book besides the outside bets?" exclaimed young Hopkins, suddenly realizing that Tony the Tout had made good.

"You should have told us how you were going to pull it off," drawled Floyd. "We nearly had heart failure, and you can't blame us for doubting you, can you?"

"Well, I've showed you that I could put one over, anyway," returned Tony. "And now, so far as I'm concerned, they can turn all the race tracks in the country into golf links. I'm going into a decent respectable saloon business back home."

What's the Use of a Twin?

A Chicago man has been arrested for appropriating and wearing the clothes of his twin brother. What's the use of being a twin?

Neighbors

BY ABBIE FARWELL BROWN

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

Dorothy Beacon was quite unaware that she was an object of interest to her next-door neighbor. This was not strange, for the twin dwellings were not in the fashionable quarter of the city, and even on the avenue it is a wise woman who knows her own neighbor.

The house adjoining bore in its window wistful printed signs of emptiness unsatisfied. In the eye of the hungry boarding-house one can usually read little Oliver's appeal for "more." But the hall bedroom in the third floor front of this particular boarding-house was no aching void. From its window the admiring eyes of Miss Fanny Bate, typewriter, had in a year's off-hours watched the incomings and outgoings of Miss Beacon, her feminine ideal.

In the earlier days it had seemed to Miss Bate, fresh from rustic amenities, the obvious thing that she and Miss Beacon should become friends. But, as the long, lonely days went by, Dorothy came and went her joyous way, and the paths of the two seemed as far from meeting as at first.

More than once she had met Miss Beacon on the street and had shot timid glances of recognition. But Dorothy passed, always oblivious of the neutral-tinted figure hesitating on curb or crossing. Dorothy was not snobbish, she was merely preoccupied.

Late one spring afternoon Dorothy was crossing the common on her way home from a tea. The sun slanted through the trees pleasantly and dabbled with golden reflections the mild surface of the pond. A small, ragged child was playing alone on the curbing, reaching out carelessly over the water. Even as Dorothy passed the child lost her balance and splashed forward. Instantly Dorothy ran to the rescue, and, forgetting her dainty raiment, without much difficulty succeeded in dragging out the frightened mite.

"Oh, you poor little thing!" she cried, "what am I going to do with you? Where do you live, Baby?" But the child wailed unintelligibly. Dorothy looked about for assistance.

At the moment a little, brown figure hurried up from the other side of the pond. Fanny Bate, on her way home from the office, had seen the rescue with mingled emotions. Here was her heroine in difficulty. Perhaps this was the chance she sought to insert the wedge of friendship. She approached with heightened color.

"I saw it all from the other side," she said in timid admiration. "How quick you were! Can't I do something to help you? Here, let her have my golf-cap to keep her warm," and she pulled the wrap from her shoulders. But the child drew away from the new-comer and clung, roaring, to the other's skirts. Dorothy knelt beside her and gently insinuated the cape about her. "Now tell me where you live, Baby," she cooed, with a caress on the dripping curls. The child sobbed out the number of an obscure and dubious street.

"Salvation Alley—oh, yes, I know where that is," said Dorothy briskly; "I will get her home in no time."

"But you oughtn't to go alone," exclaimed Miss Bate. "It's not a nice part of the city, is it? Let me go with you."

Miss Beacon was not used to suggestions. "Oh, no, indeed, thank you," she said. "I can go quite well alone. I visit the North End often in my charity work. But I will take a carriage." She stooped to take the child's hand.

"Polly tired!" wailed the little one. "Lady carry Polly," and she put up her dripping arms.

"Oh, let me!" cried the other girl, stepping forward eagerly. "It won't hurt my old dress." But the baby set up a howl.

"No! Want pretty lady!" she cried, turning to Dorothy with emphatic preference. The girl smiled without a trace of conceit. "You see, I must go," she said. "Thank you very much, but it will be all right when we are in the carriage." But at the word she stopped and her face flushed.

Miss Bate was hesitating, disappointed at the turn of affairs, when Dorothy changed her mind. "Excuse me," she said, "if you will go with me, after all, and if you will lend me the money for the carriage, I shall be greatly obliged. I forgot that I have not my purse with me."

Fanny Bate had in her bag her week's salary. "Oh, yes," she smiled joyfully, "I shall be so glad. It is so much nicer for two to do an unpleasant thing together, isn't it?"

Dorothy picked up the child, and the rescuers made their way to the street, where Fanny hailed a cab and they were soon rolling northward. Once in the cab, the baby fell asleep, and Fanny subsided into bashfulness. The joy of being thus suddenly face to face with her adored filled her with self-consciousness. But Dorothy beamed with affability, and soon they were chatting about the queer and quaint corners of the old city, which Fanny apologized for not knowing better. "I am a stranger here," she said. "I know little of the city and very few people—yet."

"You will soon find yourself at home," said the other girl. "I know that strangers say we are cold and hard to approach, but I don't believe it." She smiled so winningly that Fanny Bate's heart beat with triumph. The gates were opening!

"I am sure they are not all so," she said with an answering smile. But at this moment the cab rattled to a stand-still and the driver announced with deprecatory accent, "This be the number you towld me, Miss."

"You had better tell him to wait," suggested Dorothy as she lifted out the sleeping child. "I don't want to walk home, do you?" And Fanny said "No," cheerfully deferring the thought of the cabby's charge, which on a less vital occasion would have seemed extravagance. Mounting the rickety stairs, they found at last the baby's mother and restored her missing penultimate youngest. Then, amid voluble thanks from the woman and howls of bereavement from the child, they "marched down again" to their chariot.

"Drive to number 10 King street," commanded Dorothy, instinctively giving her own address to the driver—"or shall I take you home first?"

"Oh, it makes no difference; to your house first, if you please." Fanny smiled, thinking what little difference, indeed. And so the cab rumbled back to respectability.

It was a wonderful journey to Fanny Bate, for now she had the other girl wholly to herself. In the simplicity of her soul she longed to express her pent-up admiration, her longings of the past year, but, unskilled in conversational maneuvers, she knew not how to direct the talk into a personal channel. Dorothy skimmed over cheerful generalities with an easy grace that Fanny found entrancing, which seemed to her familiar, not to say confidential. What fortune to have won this wonderful creature for a friend

The half hour of their ride was almost over, too soon for at least one of them. The cab turned into King street. Dorothy interrupted her own gay gossip: "Here we are—or here at least I am. And now you must give me your address, so that I can pay you to-morrow for this ride which I have borrowed."

Fanny flushed. "Oh, no, indeed!" she exclaimed, "it was my share of the adventure. I will gladly give you my address,"—she glanced whimsically up at the dingy boarding-house, almost opposite to which the cab had stopped—"but you must not pay me. It has been such a pleasure—this little adventure with you, Miss Beacon."

Fannie Hailed a Cab.

Dorothy stared. "Why, you know my name!"

"Oh, yes. I live next door to you. I have seen you a great many times."

"You live here?" Dorothy glanced at the boarding-house with its sordid sign, at Fanny Bate's costume as the latter paid the cabman from her slender purse. Fanny turned to her smilingly, but Dorothy interrupted the the smile. "I do not want you to pay for the cab," she insisted. "It was my own affair and I asked you to help. I shall send in the money to-morrow," but she hesitated at the sight of the distress in Fanny's face.

"Please don't say any more about it. I am glad to do it. It is my chance"—in her turn Fanny hesitated. How could she make Miss Beacon understand? Dorothy saw that for some reason she must not press the point, but was as far from fathoming Fanny's thought as little Polly would have been.

"Well," she said reluctantly, "if you insist, I will say no more. But—well, I thank you very much." She shrugged her shoulders, then held out her hand. She was embarrassed and ill at ease, not knowing how to meet a King street neighbor. "I did not know we were such near neighbors," she remarked. "But, of course, in a city like this one never expects to know who lives next door. I don't remember ever to have seen you before to-day."

Fanny smiled wistfully. "I have seen you from my window often;" her tone was tentative; she waited. Dorothy smiled again, gathered her skirts, and turned to the flight of steps.

"I have a ruined gown, but I am glad we happened to be there when the baby fell in, aren't you?" she said, and nodded herself out of sight. The other girl slowly ascended the parallel flight of steps, and, drawing her latch-key, let herself into the boarding-house.

"Yes, I'm glad," she said. "I shall have to give up going to hear Bernhardt; but it was worth it—oh, yes, it was worth more to spend an hour and a half with her. If only—but this is the beginning and the end of it, I suppose. She didn't even ask my name! Next-door neighbors; as she says, what does that count for in a big city? Neighbor is a queer word anyway. I guess it doesn't mean anything except in the country—and in the Bible."

DRUGS IS DRUGS.

The writer took a doctor's prescription to the drug store to have it filled. In some way this piece of paper became torn in half, so that when the patron handed the druggist the first piece that public servant at once measured out the ammonia salt it called for and placed the small vial before his customer.

"How much?" asked the patron.

"Ten cents."

"Oh, beg pardon!" said the purchaser, at this juncture finding the remainder of the prescription in his pocket. "This piece says to add enough water to the other to make four ounces."

"Very well," rejoined the apothecary, dumping the contents of the small vial into a four-ounce bottle and adding the required water. "There you are, sir; 40 cents more, please."

"What! Ten cents for the ammonia and 40 cents for the water?"

"Exactly. The doctor's name written after the water makes it a prescription, and we put up no prescriptions under 50 cents."—Judge.

BED-BOUND FOR MONTHS.

Hope Abandoned After Physicians' Consultation.

Mrs. Enos Shearer, Yew and Washington Sts., Centralia, Wash., says: "For years I was weak and run down, could not sleep, my limbs swelled and the secretions were troublesome; pains were intense. I was fast in bed for four months. Three doctors said there was no cure for me, and I was given up to die. Being urged, I used Doan's Kidney Pills. Soon I was better and in a few weeks was about the house, well and strong again."

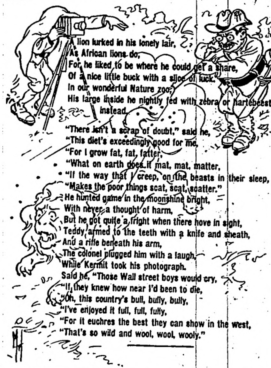
ENTERTAIN ROOSEVELT

Emulate Famous Gridiron Club in Giving ex-President Rousing Good Time—Songs Were a Feature.

Nairobi, British East Africa.—Col. Roosevelt heard his prowess as a lion killer told in song and sketch at the entertainment given the other night by the "Nairobi Follies," which Mr. Roosevelt and his son Kermit attended as the guests of his excellency, Mr. F. J. Jackson, C. G., C. M. G., acting governor, as an evening's diversion after dining at government house. The topical songs dealing with Mr. Roosevelt were a feature of the occasion, and at each allusion made to himself, Col. Roosevelt's laugh rang out above the applause and laughter of the rest of the audience.

The song describing Col. Roosevelt's lion hunting was sung by Miss Shooter in the course of a sketch entitled, "A Tale of the Chase." It ran as follows:



A lion lurked in his lonely lair,
As African lions do,
For he liked to be where he could get a share,
Of a nice little buck with a slice of luck,
In our wonderful Nature zoo;
His large inside he nightly fed with zebra or hartebeest instead.
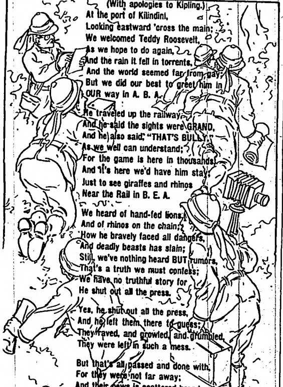
"There isn't a scrap of doubt," said he,
"This diet's exceedingly good for me,
"For I grow fat, fat, fatter,
"What on earth does it mat, mat, matter,
"If the way that I creep, on the beasts in their sleep,
"Makes the poor things scat, scat, scatter."
He hunted game in the moonshine bright,
With never a thought of harm,
But he got quite a fright when there hove in sight,
Teddy, armed to the teeth with a knife and sheath,
And a rifle beneath his arm,
The colonel plugged him with a laugh,
While Kermit took his photograph.
Said he, "Those Wall street boys would cry,
"If they knew how near I'd been to die,
"Oh, this country's bull, bully, bully,
"I've enjoyed it full, full, fully,
"For it euchres the best they can show in the west,
"That's so wild and wool, wool, wooly."



(With apologies to Kipling.)
At the port of Kilindini,
Looking eastward 'cross the main;
We welcomed Teddy Roosevelt,
As we hope to do again,
And the rain it fell in torrents,
And the world seemed far from gay;
But we did our best to greet him in
OUR way in A. B. A.

He traveled up the railway,
And he said the sights were GRAND,
And he also said, "THAT'S BULLY,"
As we well can understand;
For the game is here in thousands,
And it's here we'd have him stay,
Just to see giraffes and rhinos
Near the Rail in B. E. A.

We heard of hand-fed lions,
And of rhinos on the chain;
How he bravely faced all dangers,
And deadly beasts has slain;
Still, we've nothing heard BUT rumors,
That's a truth we must confess;
We have no truthful story for
He shut out all the press.

Yes, he shut out all the press,
And he left them there to guess;
They raved, and growled, and grumbled,
They were left in such a mess.

But that's all passed and done with,
For they were not far away;
And their news is scattered broadcast,
Over all the world to-day!
Still, he sent in news one Tuesday,
It is nice to be polite;
But the New York papers had it
On the previous Sunday night.

Oh! it really was a frost,
And one finds it to his cost,
If he tries to baulk the pressmen,
He is very often lost.

Pays Dearly for Profanity.

Danville, Pa.—Sixty-seven cents an oath is the rate that was paid by Frank Ortman and his son John of Derey township for the luxury of several choice cuss words hurled at Matthew L. Sheep in the harvesting of a wheat crop on Sheep's farm.

Sheep, bent on revenge, invoked the aid of the blue laws. In all there were 11 oaths, five by the father and six by the son. In addition to this the son was charged with assault and battery.

The elder Ortman was dismissed upon the payment of fine and costs, while his son was held for court under $300 bail.

Couple Have Twenty-Two Children.

Skowhegan, Me. — Announcement was made the other day that a daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dickey of Canaan, which is the twenty-second child born to them in 27 years. Mrs. Dickey was married when she was 14 years of age and Mr. Dickey was only a few years her senior. Of the 22 children not one has been sick except with mild childhood ailments.

Left Riches to Sweetheart

Young and Attractive Milliner in Michigan Town Falls Heir to Legacy of $20,000.

Saginaw, Mich.—A strange story of love, death and fortune came to light here with the announcement that Miss Harriet A. Albright of this city, a milliner employed by Mrs. Marie A. Schmidt at 117 South Jefferson avenue, had been left a legacy of $20,000 by Dr. Wickner of Erie, Pa.

Miss Albright is in Detroit for a brief stay, preparatory to her departure for Missouri.

Miss Albright is the daughter of a well-known Midland couple, is in her early twenties and is attractive and good looking. She learned the millinery business in Midland and went to Bay City a couple of years ago as a trimmer in a store there. While in Bay City she met Dr. Wickner, who frequently visited in Saginaw and Bay City, where he had friends and also business matters to attend to.

Dr. Wickner was a number of years Miss Albright's senior and had made a considerable fortune by investment and speculation, it is said. He belonged to a socially prominent and well-to-do Erie family. An attachment sprang up between Miss Albright and Dr. Wickner, it is said, from their first meeting, and it rapidly ripened into love. The doctor found it convenient to visit Bay City often and continued his visits to Saginaw after Miss Albright removed here last year.

Last October, while Dr. Wickner was visiting in Bay City, he was taken ill suddenly and died after a brief sickness. Miss Albright was with him and on his deathbed, it is said, he informed her he had left her a portion of his property in his will.

AREA OF THE U. S

Now Has 3,743,344 Square Miles, Exclusive of Alaska.

Boundary Data Given, Together with Interesting Historical Description of Manner in Which Mason and Dixon Fixed Famous Line.

Washington.—The geological survey of the United States has taken advantage of the fact that boundaries of the United States have all been finally fixed and the land and water area of each state charted, to issue two bulletins, one of which deals exclusively wit hthe history of all boundary lines, not only of the nation but the individual states, and the other with the area of the country. Except for possible errors in the misinterpretation of the coast line there is little doubt that the measurements of the country as a whole are now nearer accurate than ever before. The total area of the United States is given as 3,743,344 miles, exclusive of Alaska, the canal zone and the island possessions.

One of the most interesting historical descriptions in the bulletin on boundaries is that describing the fixing of Mason and Dixon's line. The passage is as follows:

"According to the original grants of Pennsylvania and Maryland the boundary between them was to be the fortieth degree of north latitude. This line being found to pass north of Philadelphia and to exclude Pennsylvania from Delaware bay, negotiations ensued between the proprietors to rectify this geographical blunder, and for nearly a century the matter remained unsettled.

"In 1760 commissioners and surveyors were appointed, who spent three years in measuring the base line and the tangent line between Maryland and Delaware. The proprietors then, wearied with the delay, sent over from England two famous mathematicians, Charles Dixon and Jeremiah Mason, who verified the work of their predecessors and ran the line west between Pennsylvania and Maryland, since known as 'Mason and Dixon's line.'

"Mason and Dixon fixed the latitude of this line at 39 degrees 43 minutes 18 seconds. A re-survey in 1850 by Col. Graham determined it to be 39 degrees 43 minutes 26.3 seconds.

"Mason and Dixon began their work in 1763 and were stopped by Indians in 1767, having run the line about 244 miles west of the Delaware, not quite finishing their work. They put up milestones all along said line, every fifth one being marked with the arms of the respective proprietors.

"In consequence of the accidental removal of the stone at the northeast corner of Maryland, commissioners were appointed in 1850 by Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland, to revise the former survey, which was done by Lieut. Col. Graham of the United States topographical engineers. The result confirmed the work of Mason and Dixon and Maryland gained by the re-survey a little less than two acres."

BABY FALLS THREE STORIES

Youngster Plunges Thirty Feet to Ground, But Frightened Mother Finds Him Uninjured.

Chicago.—After he had fallen to the ground from a third-floor porch in the rear of his home in a flat building at 119 West Van Buren street, Thomas Geharty, two years old, was picked up by his mother uninjured.

While playing on a bench on the porch the baby leaned over the porch railing and, losing his balance, fell to the ground.

The child's mother, hearing him scream as he fell, ran to the porch and saw him lying on the ground 20 feet below. Frantic with fright she ran down the stairs, believing he had been killed.

Just as she was about to pick the baby up, to her amazement and delight, he looked up into her face and smiled:

"I just fell down," he lisped faintly.

The child was taken to the office of a physician and thoroughly examined, but it was found that no bones were broken and he seemed to have suffered no ill effects from his fall.

Court Urges Whipping Post.

New York.—In passing judgment on a man charged with having blackened his wife's eyes Police Magistrate House declared in court: "What this state needs is a whipping post for wife-beaters, and I am willing to head a movement to establish it. We also need something for the wives who are beaten. From ten to fifty badly whipped wives come here daily for warrants for their husbands, and then when the brutes are arraigned the women refuse to prosecute. If we had a whipping post with a cat-o'-nine-tails attachment, I think we could discourage the wife-beating habit."

AND NO WONDER.

"I don't know why you moved, my dear. Your house was close to the golf links."

"I know; but I found the children were learning such bad language."

HAD AWFUL WEEPING ECZEMA

Face and Neck Were Raw—Terrible Itching, Inflammation and Soreness—All Treatments Failed.

Cuticura Proved a Great Success.

"Eczema began over the top of my ear. It cracked and then began to spread. I had three different doctors and tried several things, but they did me no good. At last one side of my face and my neck were raw. The water ran out of it so that I had to wear medicated cotton, and it was so inflamed and sore that I had to put a piece of cloth over my pillow to keep the water from it, and it would stain the cloth a sort of yellow. The eczema itched so that it seemed as though I could tear my face all to pieces. Then I began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and it was not more than three months before it was all healed up. Miss Ann Pearsons, Northfield, Vt., Dec. 19, 1907."

All in Fight Against Tuberculosis.

Prevention of tuberculosis versus dividends is the proposition which some of our largest insurance companies are now trying to establish. The Metropolitan Life recently applied for permission to erect a sanatorium for its policy holders and employes afflicted with tuberculosis, but the application was refused on grounds of illegality by New York State Superintendent of Insurance Hotchkiss. The company is, however, conducting an active educational campaign by distributing 3,500,000 pamphlets among its policy holders. The Provident Savings Life Assurance society has also established a health bureau, where its policy holders may receive free medical advice. Several fraternal orders, notably the Modern Woodmen, Knights of Pythias, Royal League, Royal Arcanum and Workmen's Circle, have already established or are contemplating the erection of sanatoria for their tuberculous members.

A Noble Love.

"Is the contract of dower properly drawn up, signed and witnessed?" asked the count of Castle-on-the-Bum.

"Yes," sighed Gladys Golden.

"There are no loopholes through which your wise lawyers of Philadelphia might creep?"

"Not a loophole," said the fair Gladys.

"And your father's holdings in Amalgamated Whalebone, American Cheese and Macaroni and Tin Soup-Plate 6s have not been affected by the recent depression?"

"No, dearest," answered Miss Golden, firmly.

"Then I love you," said the noble count; and two fond hearts beat as one.—Puck.

Early to Bed.

The man who makes it the habit of his life to go to bed at nine o'clock usually gets rich and is always reliable. Of course going to bed does not make him rich—I merely mean that such a man will in all probability be up early in the morning and do a big day's work, so his weary bones put him to bed early. Rogues do their work at night. Honest men work by day. It's all a matter of habit and good habits in America make any man rich. Wealth is a result of habit.—John Jacob Astor.

No Infallible Method.

A leading mathematician of France gives another warning that there is no infallible method of doubling one's stakes after a loss. "All one can do," says he, "is to combine one's play so as to have a great chance of winning a little and a little chance of losing much, and many chances of losing little."

IT WORKS
The Laborer Eats Food That Would Wreck an Office Man.

Men who are actively engaged at hard work can sometimes eat food that would wreck a man who is more closely confined.

This is illustrated in the following story:

"I was for 12 years clerk in a store working actively and drank coffee all the time without much trouble until after I entered the telegraph service.

"There I got very little exercise and drinking strong coffee, my nerves were unsteady and my stomach got weak and I was soon a very sick man. I quit meat and tobacco and in fact I stopped eating everything which I thought might affect me except coffee, but still my condition grew worse, and I was all but a wreck.

"I finally quit coffee and commenced to use Postum a few years ago, and I am speaking the truth when I say, my condition commenced to improve immediately and today I am well and can eat anything I want without any bad effects, all due to shifting from coffee to Postum.

"I told my wife today I believed I could digest a brick if I had a cup of postum to go with it.

"We make it according to directions boiling it full 20 minutes and use good rich cream and it is certainly delicious."

"Look in pkgs. for a copy of the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

"There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

PAINT DURABILITY.

The first thought in painting should, of course, be durability—and durability means simply pure paint properly applied. Pure paint is pure white lead and linseed oil (with or without tinting material).

Some years ago the paint-buyer was likely to get adulterated or counterfeit white lead if he was not familiar with brands. To-day he may buy with perfect safety if he only makes sure that the Dutch Boy Painter trademark is on the packages of white lead that he buys. This trademark was adopted by National Lead Company to distinguish the pure white lead made by them from the worthless adulterated and fake goods. It is a guarantee as valuable to the house-owner as the education of a paint expert could be.

UNDER A DARK MOON.

Dolly—The motor boat is superior to the canoe even if we do have to carry a chaperon.

Dick—I should say so. The "chug-chug" makes such a racket she couldn't hear a smack to save herself."

Laundry work at home would be much more satisfactory if the right Starch were used. In order to get the desired stiffness, it is usually necessary to use so much starch that the beauty and fineness of the fabric is hidden behind a paste of varying thickness, which not only destroys the appearance, but also affects the wearing quality of the goods. This trouble can be entirely overcome by using Defiance Starch, as it can be applied much more thinly because of its greater strength than other makes.

Decidedly Rattled.

Of an Irishman, named Dogherty, a speaker of rare eloquence, the following amusing story is told: After one of his speeches he asked Canning what he thought of it. "The only fault I could find in it," Canning answered, "was that you called the speaker, 'Sir' too often." "My dear friend," said Dogherty, "if you knew the state I was in while speaking, you would not wonder if I had called him 'Ma'am!'"

He says, "If irrigated gravel pits are worth one-half of the $250 an acre they are selling for, Red Lake county farms would be cheap at $100 per acre." He says that there are opportunities for the capitalist to make big money in the west, but does not think it a good place for the man of moderate means.

J. A. Duffy, of Red Lake Falls, was looking after his real estate interests in this locality on Friday and Saturday last. He has more real estate loans in this end of the country than any other loan agent that has done business in this part of the country, and we are of the opinion that he has more real estate and chattel loans in the eleven townships than all the banks in Thief River Falls combined. He has been a steady advertiser in both papers published up here, thus going after the business and gettng it. Mr. Duffy has a host of friends in this part of the county, that he has exended favors to in the past, and as one farmer tell the other of course he does a big banking and loan business in this part of the country.—Sunbeam.

THE FARMER GETS HIS THIS YEAR

Great Record of Grain Production in Southern Red Lake County.

The farmers of souther Red Lake county are about the happiest lot of people on the North American continent. The threshing machine is telling the story that is making them feel funny all over. The former whose crop did not turn out several hundred bushels better than he expected, and everybody expected a big crop is the exception. This statement is literallytrue. There are any number of farmers within a radius of ten miles of Red Lake Falls who got from three to five hundred bushels more of wheat than they expected.

For example, Ed Enright, who lives four mile north of town, got 500 bushels more of wheat than he expected. One large field on his place went 27 bushels to the acre, and the average yield for the farm, and it is a big farm, is 22 bushels. A part of his land was low enough so that the heavy rains early in the season caused some damage, but Mr. Enright hasn't any grudge against the weather man. He's quite satisfied with the twenty-two.

Mat Skala threshed 4900 bushels of wheat and the average yield per acre for the whole crop is 22 bushels. If the weather used the sprinkling can too prodigiously early in the season, Mat has forgotten all about that.

The average yield of wheat on Joe Laurent's big farm in Terrebonne was 27 bushels to the acre. The average yield of oats was 40, barley 35, rye 15, flax 12. Mr. Laurent's neighbors, J. B. Supernault and Xavier Sauve, got just about the same yield. Mr. Laurent had one large piece of wheat that went 32 bushels to the acre.

E. Hilse of Louisville township got 26 bushels an dhis brother, H. Hilse got 22 bushels to the acre. This is the average yield of wheat from big fields. A. Zuty of the same township got 26 1-2 and H. Raymond 27 bushels of wheat to the acre.

Carl Gerlach residing northwest of town, got 22 and L. Jahnke 26 bushels to the acre.

The poorest piece on the Houston & Finney farm near Wylie went 17 bushels and the best piece 27 bushels of wheat to the acre.

The yield of oats is not unusually large, tho there are some exceptions. Here's one exception: Wm. Montrenil's oat crop looked good to him. He thought he'd get about 500 bushels and he got 1100. Wheat is a bumper crop sure enough. Oats, barley, rye and flax yielded good but not unusual. It is estimated that the average yield of oats will be from 35 to 40 bushels, but the quality is good and the oats weigh heavy.

But corn—say, it's enough to make those Iowa and Illinois farmers, about whose corn crops you read in the geographies, turn green with envy. A lot of corn stands from 12 to 14 feet high and it is loaded with big heavy ears and the crop is now beyond danger of injury by frost. The farmers tried to raise fodder corn this year, but it wouldn't work. They couldn't keep the ears from growing on the corn no matter how thick the seed had been planted.

The names of farmers published are just a few that the reporter was able to get in conversation with people on the street. The story is not "padded" in the least. Hundreds of farmers in the southern part of the county could give just as favorable reports as those published.

County Commissioner Wm. Demann who was in town Tuesday gave some figures that are conclusive. His thresh ing rig has been running for several weeks and he says that everywhere that he has been the yield of wheat has been good—the grain running from 16 to 27 bushels to the acre. He says that the average yield of the wheat that he has handled, and he has handled a lot, is better than 20 bushels to the acre. It is a safe statement to make to say that the average yield of wheat in southern Red Lake county will not be far from 20 bushels to the acre. That's bumping a little ahead of any bumper crop that the county has had for a number of years. Who wouldn't be happy—if he were a farmer?

OFFICIALS ARE OUSTED

Three County Commissioners Removed by Governor Johnson.

The three commissioners of eBltrami county charged with malfeasance and nonfeasance in office have been rmeoved by Governor Johnson. Charges were made against the county auditor also, but action in his case has been postponed. The Beltrami county people now have an opportunity to establish an honest government.

Miss Cora Nelson Married.

The Duluth News-Tribune of last Wednesday contains the following reference to the marriage of Miss Cora Nelson, for a number of years a teacher in the Red Lake Falls schools:

"Miss Cora M. Nelson of this city and Daniel Main of Luverne, Minn., were married at 4 o'clock yesterday at the home of Mrs. Mary Ellis, 208 West Second street. Rev. A. W. Ryan officiated.

"Mr. Main and his bride left last night on the Tionesta for a wedding trip to Mackinac Island and will be at home after Oct. 1 in Luverne, where Mr. Main is assistant cashier in the First National Bank. The bride was for two years a teacher in the high school here and previous to that had taught in some of the range towns."

Miss Nelson was a very popular teacher, as well as a most charming young lady, and her many friends will wish for her every happiness.

WILL BUILD NEW COURT HOUSE

Contract Was Let Tuesday and Work Has Already Been Commended.

At the meeting of the county commissioners held Tuesday several important matters came up consideration. Firstly, that is, first and foremost, was the consideration of bids for the construction of a new court house. All legal barriers to official action that the industrious revolutionists at the north endhad sought to place in the way of commissioners having been removed, the commissioners proceeded to a consideration of the bids for the work of constructing the building according to plans and specifications on file in the county auditor's office.

The lowest bidder was James H. Brady of Red Lake Falls and his bid was accepted. The commissioners have entered into a contract with Mr. Brady to construct the building. Mr. Brady's bid was $15,331.00. Aug. Morin of this city offered to do the work for $15,489.00. There was one outside bidder but his bid was several hundred dollars higher than Mr. Brady's. The successful bidder is a capable man and there is no doubt that the work will be well done. It is gratifying, too, that the work is to be done by local people. By the terms of the contract Mr. Brady agrees to have the building completed by June 1, 1910.

County Surveyor C. H. Martz was employed to lay out the grounds preparatory to the construction of the new building. All of the work is in capable hands and Red Lake County is to have a new court house at moderate cost and everybody ought to be happy. A number of men are now employed on court house hill and for some time that will be a busy place.

It is fortunate indeed that there is such a beautiful site for a court house in the city for, tho it is to be a rather modest building it will show up to advantage in its fine location. No doubt even the Thief River people as they pass by on the train will admire the fine building and beautiful grounds and perhaps they will be so well pleased that they will wonder what evil influence possesses them to covet their neighbor's possessions and do so many childish things. No doubt they have learned many things. One, for example, that experience is a very "dear teacher." It's a shame to use such a shop-worn, dog-eared expression, but it describes the situation quite well.

The commissioners have been learning things, too. The legality of certain of their acts was questioned and the county dads have been studying law a little. They find that a certain appropriation for public work to be done at Thief River Falls was not legal. Though at the time of the appropriation of $1000 for the proposed work the commissioners believed that they were acting with proper authority, they find that they were not, so a resolution was passed instructing the county auditor that he must not issue a warrant for the amount of the irregular appropriation.

Thus endeth the steenth lesson. Much other business of importance was transacted. The official proceedings are published in this issue of the Gazette.

NELSON TO FARMERS

The formal address opening the state fair of 1909, was delivered by Senator Knute Nelson. The speech dealt particularly with the state and its great resources and the financial independence resulting from the development of those resources. In his analysis of the state's resources and the unprecedented prosperity of its inhabitants, he called attention to the fact that at least three-fifths of the state is as yet undeveloped, predicting that within the lifetime of the grand children of the present generation Minnesota will have a population of fifty millions of people. This, he believed, would be accomplished not only by settlement upon the uncultivated lands but by the establishment of great iron manufacturing plants Upon the farmer, whom he termed "the gentry of our civilization," rested the responsibility for the preservation of the soil. He urged the farmer to not take the cream and leave nothing but the skimmed milk of the farm to posterity. These farms should be bequeathed to the children in as fertile a condition as when received from Uncle Sam. Senator Nelson regretted the present day tendency of the younger generation to leave the farm for city life. He urged the con servation of the children for the farm.

"In most cases the farmer's boy who abandons the farm for city life, makes a mistake," said the senator. "A few succeed but the majority fall by the wayside and live to regret their entrance into the vortex of over crowded city life. Farmers, the remedy for this is largely in your own hands. You must make farm labor and farm life more pleasant and attractive. You must give the boys shorter hours and more holidays. Give them an ample everyday education and supply them with books, magazines and newspapers. Do not rout them out of bed before sunrise and make them work until dark. Give them good board and good clothes.

"Do not aim to send your boy to college just because you have the means. As a rule, a practical, industrial education such as our agricultural farms school gives, is a wholesome supplement to a good common school education. Above all teach your children to regard the occupation of a farmer as the noblest and the most honorable of all pursuits and employments."

GAZETTE VICTIM OF CONDITIONS

On January 1 the Subscription Rate Will be Raised to $1.50.

For some time conditions have been pointing to the fact that such a paper as the Gazette cannot be issued to its readers for a dollar a year and leave any revenue from the subscription end of the business. Week after week the cost of issuing the Gazette has increased. Blank paper has advanced from $1.75 a hundred pounds to $3.25 with every prospect that it will go to $4.00 or higher before the winter is over. Wages and office expenses have increased more than fifty per cent. in the past seven years. Then, too, with the spirit that nothing is too good for Gazette readers, the size of the paper has been enlarged and the standard of service raised.

Not only has there been an advance in the price of things that go to making a newspaper, but the advance has been general. Compare wheat at $1 per bushel with what it was when the price of the Gazette was made a dollar a year. Look at butter at 28 cents, eggs at 22 cents, and cattle, hogs, chickens and turkeys at so high a price that the average man may be thankful if he gets meat once a day. The general range of prices has increased enormously and the $660 salary of today is about equal to the $45 salary of ten years ago.

Newspapers all over the country have been forced to increase their subscription price, and today the dollar a year paper in the country towns of Minnesota is a rarity. Of the metro politan weeklies that a few years ago were so numerous only a few are left. Even with their circulations that ran up to the hundred thousands and with the type all used over from daily editions these weeklies were found unprofitable and one by one dropped out of the field.

It is plain, hard facts that confront the newspapers and "facts are stubborn things." Bills can't be paid without money, and the bigger the bills the more money it takes. There was a time when by close cutting a respectable appearing paper could be issued for a dollar, but it costs more than that now. That is why on the first of next January the price of the Gazette will go to a dollar and a half a year. Up to the night of December 31, 1909, subscriptions will be taken at one dollar a year for as many years, as anyone may want to pay, but on the morning of January 1, 1910, the price will be $1.50 and will continue at that figure. In the past the paper has had but one price—a dollar a year—everybody being treated alike. With the change in price it will be the same way. You will all be favorites, but one no more than another.

SOMERVILLE SHOT DOWN

FORMER STATE SENATOR PROBABLY FATALLY WOUNDED BY ANGRY CLIENT.

FIRED AT HIM TWICE

Trouble Over Land Deal Prompted Act.—Assailant Fails in Attempt to End His Own Life on the Spot.

Sleepy Eye.—Hon. George W. Somerville, a former state senator, was shot twice by John S. Hayner, in his private office on the principal street here.

The first shot passed through his left forearm and entered his side under his arm pit. The other passed entirely through his body from chest to his back, piercing his lungs.

Little Hope of Recovery.

Physicians in attendance hold out but little hope for his recovery. A hurry up call for the Drs. Mayo of Rochester was sent and one of the brothers reached Mr. Somerville's side in a few hours. The utmost will be done to save the patient, but it is realized his case is desperate.

Mr. Somerville's assailant fired a third shot, intending to take his own life. He might have been successful in this, had not the city's marshal, attracted by the reports of the first two explosions, entered the place on a run and struck the man's arm as he held the revolver to his head. The bullet passed a few inches from the man's head and entered the ceiling of the consultation room in which the men had been standing.

The assassin had no chance to escape and apparently had planned none, even though he was prepared to shoot the former senator. The weapon was taken from him and later he told the officers his name was John S. Hayner.

Hayner was immediately taken by automobile to the county seat at New Ulm and placed in jail in the care of the sheriff.

Assassin Gives His Version.

Trouble in the settlement of a deal over property was the motive for the shooting. Hayner believed he had been deceived by the former senator. The only statement he has made since the shooting was secured soon after he had been taken to New Ulm. He said:

"I worked for several years for the Cuddy-Cavanaugh Company, which has been digging ditches in Brown county under contracts. I have had headquarters at Sleepy Eye and New Ulm and have known Somerville a long time. A business building at Sleepy Eye came into my possession some time ago, and I was induced by Somerville to trade it for some land which he said he owned in Missouri.

"I found this land, upon investigation, to be valueless, and appealed to Somerville to square the matter. We had some correspondence, but finally he refused to reply to my letters.

"I then determined to have a personal interview with him and to get some satisfaction if possible. I was armed when I entered his office, but was hardly expecting an encounter.

"I had no sooner spoken about the land than Somerville ordered me to leave. When I showed no intention of doing so he picked up a heavy ruler which was on his desk, as if he proposed to drive me out.

"I was crazy mad by this time and began to shoot, not caring what became of either of us. I felt that I had been swindled and badly treated all around."

Hayner is about 35 years of age. He says his name is John S. Hayner and that his home is in St. Paul.

George W. Somerville is one of the best-known lawyers in the state of Minnesota. He has been active in politics and was a candidate for the republican nomination for governor in 1906, when he retired from the state senate after serving eight years.

New Ulm, Minnesota.—John S. Hayner, assailant of former State Senator Somerville of Sleepy Eye, cheated the ends of justice.

Making a rope from the blanket and other bedclothing in his cell at the county jail, he placed the end around his neck and attached the other to the iron fixtures of his cell door. When Deputy Sheriff Charles Brust went to the cell to bring his breakfast, Hayner's body was found hanging. It was cold and the man must have been dead several hours.

The sheriff and other officers kept the company of the prisoner until midnight, and the sheriff inclined to the opinion that a guard ought to be maintained through the entire night. The county attorney did not coincide with him in this belief, with the result that Hayner was left unattended.

REPORTS ADVERSELY ON CANAL.

Superior-to-Mississippi-River Project Considered Unfeasible by Fitch.

Stillwater, Minn.—A letter from the United States engineer's office at Duluth says that Graham E. Fitch, colonel of the corps of engineers, has reported adversely on the proposition of constructing a canal between Lake Superior and the Mississippi river. This is in accordance with the resolution approved by congress on March 3, 1909.

The House of the Big Logs.

One of the most interesting structures at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition will be the forestry building. In making it 126 choice fir logs have been used as main columns. These pieces of fir timber are no ordinary logs. The longest, twenty-six of them, are each 54 feet long, and all the rest are 42 feet long. The average diameter at the top is 6 feet 6 inches. Each of the largest of the columns contains about 18,000 feet of lumber. The building is 212 feet long, 128 feet wide and 90 feet high.

WIDOWER KILLS CHILDREN.

Fires His Farm House and Then Hangs Himself.

Redwood Falls.—William Tibbitts, a farmer who lived near Delhi in this county, killed two young girls, one his own daughter. Then, after making an unsuccessful attempt to burn his farmhouse and cremate their bodies, he hurried to his barn, and hanged himself.

The victims of the supposed maniac were his 10-year-old daughter and Cecile Norton, about 18 years of age, daughter of his housekeeper, Mrs. Rose Norton. More lives might have been sacrificed, but for the fact that Mrs. Norton, who has been employed by Tibbitts since the death of his wife two months ago, was visiting at her former home at St. Paul Park, Minn. With her were the two youngest daughters of Tibbitts.

The hapless victims of the farmer were slain with a heavy piece of iron, either an iron stake or a long tooth from some farm machine. No one so far as known saw the killing. The girls could have had no chance at all for their lives. Everything indicates that their slayer struck them from behind and crushed their skulls at the first blow. Many blows from the deadly weapon then followed, their heads and upper portions of their bodies being cut and bruised in a horrible manner.

The girls were killed either in the house or just outside the door. Their bodies were found under some hay in the house. Tibbitts had taken hay from the barn and covered the corpses, then setting fire to it. His little boy saw the smoke rushing from the building and summoned the neighbors, who arrived just in time to save the building and preserve the bodies of the dead girls from cremation.

It was when the neighbors were bending their energies to extinguish the flames that Tibbits ran to the barn and completed the day's tragedies.

Tibbits was about 70 years of age and was well thought of in this community. The sheriff and county attorney have started a thorough investigation.

The coroner's jury called to investigate the triple tragedy returned a verdict that Cecile Norton and Dorothy Tibbetts came to their death by the hand of William Tibbetts, and that the latter committed suicide by hanging. No motive was assigned for the double killing and suicide. Neighbors say the man had been unbalanced mentally some time.

THROW BABES IN WELL.

Barnum Woman Burns Barn and Tries to Burn House.

Barnum.—Mrs. Fred Young, aged 22, wife of a farmer residing about five miles southeast of here, while her husband was on his way to town with a load of cream and milk, threw her three children, aged one, three and five years, into a deep well, set fire to the barn, destroying it, and also set fire to the house.

Failing in her effort to burn the building, she took a dose of paris green and then gashed her throat several times with a knife, making ugly wounds, but failing to sever the jugular vein.

Mrs. Young was taken to the sheriff's residence at Carlton and a special meeting of the insanity board was held at once. The woman was found to be insane and ordered committed to the state insane asylum, in case she recovers. In the meantime, she was ordered taken to a hospital at Cloquet. Her condition is serious. The physicians, however, believe that she may recover.

Mrs. Young has been in poor health for the past two years and it is said she had threatened several times to kill her children and herself. Her father committed suicide several years ago.

EX-MAYOR OF DULUTH IS DEAD.

John Drew, Aged Pioneer, Passes Away at Ninety-two.

Mr. Drew was 92 years of age last April. He was born in Reding, Conn., about 40 miles from New York City, in 1817. He came to Duluth in 1869, when the town was first started. He served two terms as mayor, the first in 1874-5, and the second in 1879-80.

He has lived here all of the 40 years since he first came to the city, and before his years made him helpless was one of the best known figures on the city streets. For a time Mr. Drew was one of a group of five or six men who handled nearly all of the business of northern Minnesota, and he was intimately identified with building up this section of the country. He is thought to have ben the oldest resident of the city.

Mr. Drew leaves a wife, Mrs. Emma H. Drew, now in Portland, with her daughter, Alice, for her health, and two sons, Charles M. Drew, employed in the city engineer's office, and John R. Drew, of Cleveland.

FAST COAST TRAIN WRECKED.

Engineer White Pinned Under His Engine.

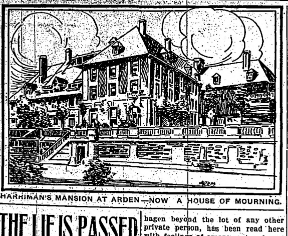
Detroit.—The North Coast Limited was in a head-on collision with a moving gravel train at the west end of the Detroit yards, while running at full speed.

Engineer White, of the passenger train, was missing and his body was found later under his engine, which was thrown almost bottom side up in a ditch.

Forestalled.

"Well, Mrs. Dennis, what are you going to give Pat for Christmas this year?" inquired the recipient of Mrs. Dennis' regular washday visits, one day at the beginning of the festal season.

"Deed thin, ma'am, I don't know," replied Mrs. Dennis, raising herself from the washtub and setting her dripping arms akimbo. "I did be thinkin' I'd give him a pair of pants, but, Lord bless ye, ma'am, only last night didn't he come home with a pair on."



HARRIMAN'S MANSION AT ARDEN—NOW A HOUSE OF MOURNING.

THE LIE IS PASSED

CONTROVERSY IS STARTED

Cook Takes Peary's Charge Cooly and Says That He Will Have Abundant Proof When the Time Comes.

New York, Sept. 8.—The lie has been passed concerning the discovery of the North Pole, and the foundation is laid for a controversy unparalleled in history.

Commander Peary is making uncertain progress southward off the coast of Labrador in his ship, the Roosevelt, but there came from him today a message as direct as his homeward journey has been slow. It challenges the veracity of Dr. Cook of Brooklyn, and further complicates the situation which the whole world is discussing. In effect, Peary discredits Cooks claims with the intimation that he (Peary) and he alone planted the American flag at the North Pole on April 6th, 1909, and that Dr. Cook, who asserts that he unfurled the flag at the Pole on April 21st, 1908, must substantiate his claim.

At Copenhagen, Cook, when shown his rival's statement tonight stood by his guns, declined to enter into a debate and calmly asserted that his records would sustain him. To prove his right of discovery before the entire world beyond a shadow of a doubt, he announced that he will despatch a ship to Greenland and bring to America his Eskimo companions. Then, with their testimony and his data, he declares that he will stand ready to face all detractors.

Peary's statement reflecting on Cook's achievement came early this morning dated Indian Harbor Labrador, the point through which he first reported his success by wireless. It had evidently been delayed in transmission and read as follows:

"Cook's story should not be taken too seriously. The two Eskimos who accompanied him say that he went no distance north and not out of sight of land. Other members of the tribe corroborate their story."

Copenhagen, Sept. 8.—"I have been to the North Pole. As I said last night when I heard of Commander Peary's success, if he says he has been to the Pole, I believe him.

"I am willing to place facts, figures and to work out observations before a joint tribunal of the scientific bodies of the world. In due course I shall be prepared to make a public announcement that will effectually dispel any doubt, if there can be such, of the fact that I have reached the pole. But knowing that I am right and that right must prevail, I will submit at the proper time my full story to a court of last resort. The people of the world."

"I will not enter into any controversy over the subject with Peary, further than to say that if he says I have taken his Eskimos, my reply is that Eskimos are nomads. They are owned by nobody and are not the private property of Commander Peary or myself. The Eskimos engaged by me were paid.

"As to the story that Peary says I took provisions stored by him, my reply is that Peary took my provisions, obtaining them from the custodian on the plea that I had been so long absent that he was going to organize relief stations for me in case I should be alive. For this I have the documentary proof."

This is Dr. Cooks reply to Peary. Coming so quickly upon the other dramatic incidents of week, Peary's despatch denying that Cook had achieved the triumph for which he has been feted and honored in Copenhagen beyond the lot of any other private person, has been read here with feelings of amazement and concern. But Cook himself seems in no way disturbed. He was perfectly cool and apparently unmover when confronted tonight with telegrams from the United States saying that Peary had denounced him as an imposter. His demeanor has not changed in the slightest from the day he landed at Copenhagen.

It is settled that Cook will send a ship back to bring to America two Eskimos who accompanied him on the last stage of his journey to the Pole, as well as some of the party who were sent back then the start of the stage began. Captain Sverdrup may command the expedition; it is Cook's desire that he shall do so, and they conferred for some hours today regarding the details of the expedition. Cook's purpose in bringing his Eskimo comrades is to have them relate their story of the trip to the Pole. He proposes to have them examined by any men familiar with the Arctic and Eskimo, including members of the Peary party, if they wish. Cook's apparent confidence is the greatest factor working in his support in Copenhagen. Those who have had the opportunity to talk with him are only of one mind, that he is an absolutely sincere, simple man, or deserves a pedestal in history as one of the greatest actors.

The Politiken, in its' leader tonight says:

"Danes remembering Peary's bad treatment of one of their own explorers, will not be surprised at his attitude toward Dr. Cook."

The general attitude here is one of suspended judgment until the evidence is produced. Caak's lecture before the Geographical Society caused a profound disappointment because the people expected more convincing proofs than Cook has given. He contended himself in his lecture with repeating what had already appeared in form of statements in the papers. The enthusiasm over the announcement of Peary's success has not waned in the least.

MURDERER IS PHYSICIAN.

Doctor Is Charged With Dismembering Girl's Body.

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 8.—Dr. George A. Fritsch, a well-known practicioner of this city, was placed under arrest tonight at police headquarters on suspicion in connection with the death of Miss Maybelle Millman of Ann Arbor, whose dismembered body was found Monday and Tuesday, in two sacks sunk in Ecorse Creek in the western suburbs of the city.

Miss Martha Henning, intimate friend of the dead girl, was alsho taken into custody as witness.

Dr. Fritsch had in his pockets $82 in money. His arrest followed the hurried return of Sheriff Gaston from Ann Arbor, where he had spent most of the day looking up clues in the Millman case.

The theory upon which the police have been working is that Miss Millman was the victim of either a medical student or a physician, and that she went to Detroit for the purpose of an operation under which she succumbed. A registered letter containing money which was received by her the day before she left home is practically the only tangible clue in the case. The Washington authorities yesterday gave permission to have the registry records examined, and close upon the examination came the news that an arrest had been made in Detroit.

Maybelle Millman, it is known, received a few days before she left home, a letter containing money. The girl told her mother that her friend Martha Henning of Detroit, had sent her money, asking her to visit Detroit. Maybelle went to Detroit, visited Miss Henning, her companion since childhood, and then disappeared.

"I am convinced that Maybelle Millman was sent the money by some man for the purpose of having a surgical operation," said Sheriff Gaston this evening. "This led her to leave her home and deceive her parents.

LETTERS THREATEN TAFT.

Chicago, Sept. 8.—Two letters threatening the life of President Taft during his visit in Chicago, now in the hands of Captain Porter of the Secret Service, have stirred up the latter, and police officials of the city, with the result that efforts will be made to make the chief executive of the nation the most guarded president that ever came to Chicago. Captain Porter was inclined yesterday to belittle the threats.

DOCTOR'S DEATH MYSTERIOUS.

Bismarck, Sept. 8.—Word received here that Dr. Barker of Underwood died in his office this morning under mysterious circumstances. He was found in his room late last night in a dying condition and was removed to a hospital but he never recovered consciousness.

HARRIMAN DEAD

GREAT FINANCIER DID NOT LIVE TO ACCOMPLISSH LIFE LONG DREAM.

DIES AT ZENITH OF POWER

But His Death Has But Little Effect On Stock Market—Funeral to Be Held Sunday at Arden Home.

Arden, N. Y., Sept. 9.—Edward H. Harriman, greatest organizer of railroads the world has ever known, met the only lasting defeat of his life today at the hands of death.

Secluded in hi smagnificent home on Tower Hill, surrounded by members ofo his family, physicians and nurses, he succumbed to intestinal disorders this afternoon, after a fight against disease which will rank for sheer grit with his remarkable struggles n the financial world.

The exact time of his death is known only in that limited circle of relatves and associates who had so effectively shielded Harriman from all outside annoyances during his last illness. The tme was given to the world as 3:55 p. m., but Mrs. Mary Simons, siste rof the dead man said tonight that the end had come at 1:30 p. m., more than two hours previous. Whether this apparent discrepancy has any bearing on the current belief that every effort was made to lessen influence of financier's death on the New York stock market is problematical. But it is significant that the time of his death as offically announced, was just 35 mnutes after trading ceased on the exchange in New York.

Harriman died peacefully an dto the en dhis brilliant mind retained its integrity. After a relapse on Sunday he sank slowly and soon after noon today there came a relapse which marked the apprach of the end. His wife, two daughters, Carol and Mary, and his sons, Walter and Roland, who have been constantly with him, assembled at the bedside and a carriage was hastily dispatched for Mrs. Simons, whose home is near Arden, three miles fro mthe Tower Hill mansion.

No spiritual adviser was at hand. The swiftest automobiles in the Harriman garage had been dspatched for the Rev. Dr. J. Holmes McGinness, the Episcopalian rector of Arden parish, and Harriman's personal chaplain, but McGuinness was not at home. When found later, although rushed up the mountain side at a breakneck speed, he did not arrive until death had come to the Arden house.

With the secrecy that has been maintained at the Harriman residence New York before it came to Arden and the valley below. Then by way of New York the report that death had arrived at the great estate on Tower Hill spread quickly and confirmation was sought at the residence by telephone. During the past ten days rumors have been so persistent and variable that little credence was at first given the report and it was a shock when a voice on the Hill replied: "Yes, that is correct; Mr. Harriman died at 3:35 p. m."

While the policy o freticence that prevailed during Harriman's illness was maintained by most of his relatives and associates after his death, O. Harriman, who is in New York, discussed the funeral arrangements briefly tonight. He said that Harriman would be burie din the family lot n a little grave yard behind St. John's Episcopal church at Arden. He will rest beside his eldest son, Edward H. Harriman, Jr., who died twenty years ago, soo nafter the family first came to Arden.

MISSING PARTS OF BODY FOUND.

Detroit, Sept. 9.—The missing portion of the body of Maybelle Millman of Ann Arbor, which had been cut up, packed in gunny sacks and thrown into Ecorse Creek, following the girl's death after a surgical operation, was found late today near Grosse Isle, where it had been washed ashore.

It was brought to Detroit tonight and examined by the coroner's physicians, who announced that the girl undobbtedly had met her death on the operating table.

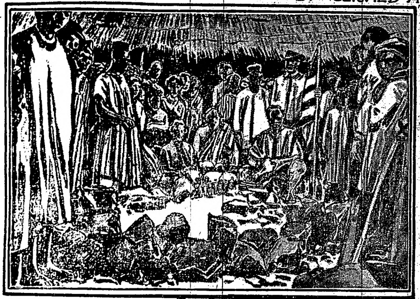
MAKES GIRL A PRINCESS.

Venna, Sept. 9.—The Emperor has created Miss Anita Stewart a princess in her own right, thus removing any difficulty of etiquette which might have been raised at the exclusive Austrian court following her marriage to Prince Miguel of Braganza, on Sept. 15, at Tullock Castle in Dingwall, Scotland.

Prince Miguel has just been here to visit the Emperor and to thank him for the honor conferred on his bride-to-be.

WEIRD FUNERALS OF AFRICA'S KINGS

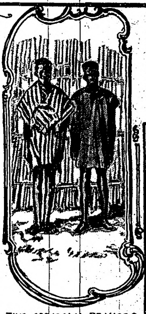
BY GERALD A. RODERICK



FUNERAL RITES

THE old king of Totoquelli was dead. It was in the Liberian hinterland, four days back from Monrovia, a region where the government levies no taxes, where the native African chiefs reign supreme, where the only statutes are the laws of the bush. A couple of English prospectors, an English rubber trader and an American missionary compose the foreign population all the way back to the French frontier. There is no part of the west coast of Africa so lightly touched by the white man, for even the occasional government officials who visit the region are black. In all the towns the babies yelled at my approach and the children fled in terror if I walked toward them.

While King Wobeh's star was in the ascendency death came out of the foggy bush and laid its hand upon him. A famous mullah man was called to make incantations and the "sand cutter" brought out all his paraphernalia of divination and peeped impressively into the future. That which Wobeh really needed, a good physician, does not exist in that region. The mullah and the "sand cutter" gave an unfavorable prognosis, so the suffering king was prepared for his departure in the manner prescribed by the law of the bush.



TWO AFRICAN PRINCES

Secretly and in the dead of night he was carried back into the bush to an obscure "half town" called Goomah, no woman being allowed to know his whereabouts. Courtesy to the mullah and the "sand cutter" demanded that Wobeh should promptly pass into the unknown, but the old man held on to life with his characteristic tenacity. It was several weeks before the news was quietly brought to Totoquelli that its founder was dead. The information was passed on to Boporo and King Sow came over to take charge of the town until all its palavers were settled.

The funeral of an African chief follows the law of the bush implicitly, but the details vary in different parts of the west coast. The proceedings in this case extended over a period of about three weeks.

First Wobeh's body was removed from the hut where he had died and placed in an open kitchen in Goomah. These kitchens are merely large huts without walls, or, rather, with walls about three feet high. The roof is of thatch and the floor of clay. In the center of one of these kitchens a shallow grave was dug. Then the feet were bound together, the arms were extended down the body and the hands bound together by means of a strong stick placed between hands and feet, the body was placed in the grave and lightly covered. After it had lain there for two days it was taken up by night and carried to Totoquelli, where it was again placed in a shallow grave, but in a hut where no woman could bring ill luck by looking upon it. The law of the bush shuts out all women from any approach to the dead. Then the family and the town began to make ready for the obsequies, formal notices were sent out to all the big kings within two days' walk, in order that they might come (with gifts) and assist Wobeh's spirit into rest.

The funeral continued for eight days. First the body was again lifted from the grave and "laid out" in an open kitchen carefully screened. The king's women were then segregated in another kitchen and intrusted with the duty of making great lamentation. Then the head of the "devil bush"—he is a great functionary in West Africa—came into the village to announce the king's death—a performance on a par with the formal notification given to a presidential nominee by a committee from a national convention. The "devil bush" is a sort of combination of secret society and a boys' boarding school. It is a collection of huts hidden away in the bush which women must avoid or pay the penalty of death. Here are collected most of the boys of the community and they remain in seclusion for a period varying from three to six years, being taught some sense and much nonsense. The grip of superstition is so strong that the head of the bush becomes a great man in the tribe and death is the penalty for any woman who looks upon his face. Totoquelli's "devil" preceded his entrance into the town by an unearthly yell, which was the signal for all the women and girls (and every man not a member of the "devil bush") to secrete themselves. Then with a series of ventriloquistic yells he came into the center of the town, announced the death of Wobeh, ordered the funeral to proceed and vanished into the bush. Then the real noise began.

Wobeh's women and children reassembled in their kitchen and resumed their mournful chant. This is a performance in which the women of West Africa are very accomplished and Wobeh's family was large enough to be heard. Meanwhile for two days and nights the men of the town made it lively for the spirits of evil that were supposed to be hovering in the bush that surrounds the village. Guns heavily charged with powder were fired at intervals throughout the entire time, causing the evil shapes to take to flight. Most of the night was given over to the beating of drums, the women and younger men dancing in procession all over town.

When night closed in on the scene and the moon began to shed its soft light through hazy clouds the night's dancing began. There was no undercurrent of sadness in it; everybody was literally out for a good time. The dancers were drummed up in groups, the drummers shuffling all through the town to organize a procession. A second crowd was gathered under the leadership of a man with a string instrument made from a calabash, and eventually a third group shuffled along to the tune of a calabash strung with iron rings, the sound being that of a gourd half filled with dried peas.

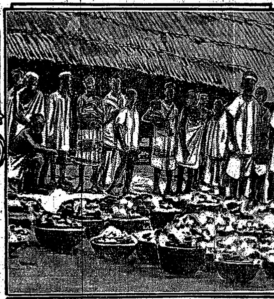
The succeeding day was one of the most eventful of all. Before sunrise the men of the town brought large stones to the grave and walled it in, making an inclosure about six feet wide and 10 feet long. Dozens of empty gin bottles were brought and placed all around the grave—a very common custom on this coast. The mound was then leveled down and the entire inclosure covered with stones and wet sand. At the head they placed a couple of small ivory tusks, a rice bowl containing Wobeh's silver ring and some kola nuts, two pitchers and a small brass kettle. Across these was laid an unsheathed sword. The fixing of the grave was not completed until they had brought a small jug of rum and poured a little of it into each vessel. The thirst of Wobeh's spirit was apparently more easily quenched than had been that of the man in life—and this enabled the men about the grave to put the greater part of the rum to better use.

After the grave had been properly arranged the town assembled to witness the significant ceremony of killing the white chicken. The principal nephew of the late king knelt on the grave and held the chicken's head above Wobeh's head. King Sow made a long speech and then different members of Wobeh's family gave the chicken messages to take to his spirit. This part of the ceremony was very solemn and impressive. It was clear that they implicitly believed that their messages would reach their destination.

Then the nephew pulled off the chicken's head and threw the body down on the grave. Curiously enough, the headless chicken fluttered around until it reached the head of the grave and then seemed to be trying to bore its way down to the king. It then fluttered away, the throng crowding each other in their efforts to watch every movement. When it finally ceased its struggles there was a chorus of "Ah!" followed by some excited talking. It was explained to me that when a chicken dies with its feet in the air it is a sign that the nephew has been true to the king and has not meddled with his women. In this case the chicken had died on its side.

Then another chicken was brought for another nephew to kill. It likewise died on its side and there was another chorus of excited grunts. A third chicken was killed by a niece, with the same result; but the fourth, killed by another niece, stopped with its feet in the air. The crowd went wild, caught up the girl and marched around the town with her on their shoulders. Wobeh had one relative that had been true.

This ceremony was followed an hour or two later by that of eating the chickens, together with rice cooked in yellow palm oil. The food was placed at the head of the grave and Wobeh's head wife presided over the pot. All the children squatted about on the grave and the other relatives were assembled around it. King Sow had a good many remarks to make before he called up the eldest son and motioned for him to take the palmful of rice which the widow had held out. Before eating it he made certain promises relative to peace in the family. Each of the relatives was called out in turn and required to go through the same performance. Old King Sow kept his ears open and whenever he was not satisfied with a given promise he arose and cross questioned the relative like a country lawyer until he made him promise what he wanted. Parts of this ceremony were exciting; at times there were outbursts of laughter at one of Sow's jokes; very little of it was sad or pathetic. When the chief widow's turn came there was pathos in her voice, though she gave no other sign of grief. Turning her motherly face to the grave, she sat there and talked to Wobeh's spirit as naturally as if she were looking into his face. Nobody needed to cross question her.



AWAITING DISTRIBUTION OF FOOD

There was nothing extraordinary for the next two days. On the first day the mourning women were taken to the creek and washed, in order that they might begin to dress up for the final feast. On the second day the men of the town were assembled under the big palaver tree and individually sworn to be loyal to the town. The oath was administered by making the man drink from a bowl of milkish fluid which was supposed to kill the man if he was insincere. On this day, also, the men brought in large quantities of firewood and the women were busy threshing and cleaning rice and pots.

Then came the third and greatest day—the slaughter of the bullock and the great feast. So far as I could learn there is no sacrificial idea involved in the ceremony; the slaughter is solely for the purpose of providing for a joyful banquet. The big bullock was led to a vacant place near the grave, just at sunrise, and securely tied down on its side. Its throat was then cut, the windpipe being severed, and the animal slowly bled to death. It was 20 minutes before the animal ceased to struggle, but its tail had been severed long before, this being the especial perquisite of the men selected as butchers.

The carcass was then skinned and King Sow sat in his leopard chair while the bullock was cut up. He kept a careful watch to see that not even an ounce of meat was taken by anybody. Two large brass kettles and a large basket were placed in front of him and in these were placed the internal organs and the choicest cuts—the king's meat. Now and then one of the butchers would overlook some small portion, but the king overlooked nothing; he had the error promptly rectified. Altogether he received about one-third of the bullock. The remainder was cut up and distributed among the families, to be cooked; positively no part of the animal except the hide and horns was discarded. There was not quite enough to go around, so the king ordered a dog killed to make up the deficiency.

Bessie Was Willing.

"Oh, dear," said the tired mother, "I wish I were a little girl again like you!" "Well," rejoined five-year-old Bessie, "let's play you are my little girl, then you act naughty and I'll spank you and send you to bed without your supper."

MRS. GILMAN IS PESSIMISTIC

Lecturer Sees Little to Praise in Either Men or Women of the Present Day.

That modesty with which it has been the custom to believe the fair sex is enshrined is a misnomer, if the statements of Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman are to be accepted as correct. Lecturing recently at the Women of Woodcraft hall, Mrs. Gilman declared woman's modesty was doubtful. "She will expose two square feet of snow white bosom," she said, "and then shudder at exposing two feet."

But women were not alone in coming in for censure. Everyone did. That is, everyone who has a brain, or who chooses to believe he has. The person with a brain was told that in reality the brain was hopelessly damaged. "Cracked" was what Mrs. Gilman called it. "That people's brains are generally more or less cracked is shown by their inability to accept new ideas, and the disconnection between what they know and how they behave," was one of her expressions.

Then Mrs. Gilman told the women that the instinct of a mother was only an animal instinct. She said that, accordingly, only one woman in 20 knows how to take care of her infants. "Taking care of children cannot be done by instinct," she added, and recommended the founding [illegible] popular nurseries.—Portland Oregonian.

BEHIND THE COUNTER

By LAWRENCE SHELBY

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

"Is this all?"

"We have some more."

"Then show it to me immediately. It's awful lazy these girls are," this last to a companion.

Down came dainty chiffon and net, some embroidered, all lovely enough to satisfy the most captious.

Each time came the old question: "How much?" no matter how often the clerk explained that the lot she was showing was 50 cents. At last the customer said:

"You mean a box, of course?"

"No, madam; a yard." Miss Sommors was growing uneasy. There were two ladies waiting who never would permit anyone but her to wait upon them, and they always made extensive purchases.

With deft fingers the girl began to get the counter cleared, when she was interrupted:

"Don't put any of that away until I decide. My goodness! Fifty cents a yard? Who would think it? Show me some of the cheap," was the next command, and the now weary girl pulled out ruching varying from five to fifteen cents.

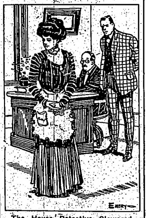
"Haven't you anything in a box?"

"Nothing but the tourist."

"Let me see that."

The girl handed her a box, and she carefully examined it, and at last decided that she would take the 15 cent for ten yards kind. "Why didn't you show me that at once?"

"From what you said I thought these others would suit you better," the words were mild, but the girl's lips were trembling. The customer gave her 25 cents, but objected when the change came back that the dime was too smooth.



The House Detective Glowered.

To save time Miss Summors said, quietly:

"Our cashier never makes a mistake, so I'll take it and give you two nickels for it."

Barely had she done so, when the floorwalker came to her and severely reprimanded her for doing so.

"What kind of discipline can we maintain, Miss Sommors?" he asked at last, "if clerks are allowed to exchange money over the counter with customers?" and knowing that she was in the wrong according to the rules of the store, Miss Sommors kept quiet, although she was nervous enough to cry.

"What a counter!" fell upon her ears; "who has disturbed stock this way?" It was the voice of the buyer. "You, Miss Sommors? This won't do. Keep your stock looking good while selling is a motto you clerks will do well to remember," and with hands crossed behind his back, the fat man departed.

"Never mind, dearie," Miss Hallon whispered, "I'll help you," and the two worked industriously, and had nearly finished putting back the stock, when a hated voice broke on Miss Sommors' ear:

"I'll take another box of that 15-cent ruching, but you'll have to send it C. O. D."

With trembling hands, Vesta Sommors made out the check, and glanced at her little silver watch. An hour yet until her noon time. That little watch! She never could look at it without remembering Dick's good, manly face. It was his Christmas gift, and he had tried to give her more, himself, his love and his name.

"No, we can't do it," she had said, sadly. "I'm so used to going down town and earning my own money, and I don't like housekeeping."

"But you'd be doing it for me," he had suggested; but she shook her head. They were good friends, nothing more, and he always tried to pass her counter several times a week, to exchange a word or two. Not too often, though. Feeling so nervous, she longed to see him, and as it was one of the days he usually came, she knew her longing would be gratified. This cheered her up a little, and she finished her task of restoring stock, and asked a woman who was looking at some of the dainty little collars:

"Can I show you anything?"

"No, I'm just looking about me," was snapped back at her. The collars were displayed in open boxes, and the woman kept on looking them over, soiling them, and keeping the clerk watching her to see that she did not manage to evade the sharp eyes of the house detective, who was leaning up against a pillar near by.

It was like a flash, the two collars were but a streak of white in the air, then disappeared.

Vesta leaned over the counter, and made a motion toward the woman, who was sauntering off after new "easy marks."

It was a motion all the clerks knew, and by means of which they communicated their suspicions to the house detectives. This particular one entertained a deep grudge toward Vesta. Receiving a higher salary than the clerks and floorwalkers, he regarded himself as a catch of no mean value, and when he began to smile upon Vesta Sommors he had expected her to respond. There was Dick, however, and Vesta did not smile. The man was vain and vengeful, and now had come his chance. Stepping up to the woman, he spoke to her in a low voice, at the same time dexterously taking the collars from her without her being aware of it. With measured step he took the detected shoplifter upstairs where the store superintendent put such people through a sweat box experience that regenerated many, and kept the rest from his store forever more.

Not only were the guilty ones thoroughly searched, but a pretense, and one that was just as good as real, was made of taking the photograph.

On this day, however, a thorough searching of the woman by the woman assistant failed to disclose any goods belonging to the store.

"How's this?" thundered the superintendent.

The house detective looked angry, as he said with some heat:

"Miss Sommors gave me the signal."

Ten minutes later Miss Vesta Sommors was standing in the superintendent's room.

"But I really saw her take the goods," she persisted.

"Always be sure, young woman. To haul up an innocent lady like this can only result in harm to the house," and Vesta knew that the superintendent was correct. Suddenly an idea came to her.

"I want to say something. I counted the collars just before she came in. I gave my count to Miss Wilson, and she entered it. If there is no report of sales, or even if there is, I ought to be able to establish my reputation for not making a blunder." Her voice trembled a little. The superintendent appreciated good service, and knew that shop lifters had many ways of concealing stolen articles, so he sent to the department to have the collars counted, and to Miss Wilson, its head, to bring up the report.

Vesta, trembling more than the shop lifter, counted the moments, while the house detective glowered. Finally Miss Wilson arrived. After having gone over them that morning according to her usual custom, she had given them to Vesta to go over. Their count had been the same. She had, after receiving orders, gone over them herself, and had Miss Albright do the same, and they found that just two collars were missing.

The house detective blandly asked, risking a severe reproof:

"But where are those two collars?"

There were the four women: Miss Wilson, Vesta, the shop lifter and the woman assistant. The house detective ran them over with his sharp eye.

"I would suggest that these four be searched," he began, but he had gone a little too far. The superintendent gave him a look, under which he wilted almost to confession, and perhaps under that man's skillful cross-examination he might have broken down, but the day was saved for him by the arrival of a cash boy with the two collars, which had been found under a stool, near which the woman had been standing when caught by the house detective. The superinetndent dismissed them with a wave of the hand, and Vesta was faint and dizzy as she and Miss Wilson hurried back to the floor.

"The beast'!' Miss Wilson had muttered, but Vesta said nothing. Her mind was changing a little, and by night she knew her future course. Dick had not come, it was hot and stuffy. People thronged the store, not one sparing a kind word or a smile of approval, and in the narrow space allotted them, the clerks all walked on each other, and became impatient. To crown it all, confused by her burning headache, the result of the house detective's treachery, she made a mistake of a dollar in her sales, and was forced to stand the loss. One dollar out of her weekly six was just too much, and when she saw Dick's face in the crowd outside, she clutched his arm and whispered:

Possibilities in Jimson Weed.

The chemist who will extract the bleaching principle from the common Jimson weed and place it within reach of family and laundry use has a fortune in store. It is a well-known fact that there is no better way of bleaching the family linen during washing than by putting a few leaves of jimson into the boiler, but there is an objection to this practice, as a very unpleasant odor is the result. This can be removed, however, by placing the clothes in cold water and boiling them, or by repeated rinsing, but all this is troublesome, and therefore many who know the value of the leaves do not use them.—Eternal Progress.

To Be Sure of Pure Water.

Raw river water should be stored antecedent to filtration for 30 days, in the opinion of Dr. A. C. Houston, director of water examinations, London. Storage reduces the number of bacteria of all sorts, and if sufficiently prolonged, devitalizes the microbes of water-borne disease (typhoid bacillus and cholera virus) [illegible]

Faroe Islanders.

A party of Faroe islanders has been visiting Edinburgh. Many of the men were attired in native dress, which while it is picturesque is not showy. On the head is a red and black check cloth cap, somewhat resembling a tam o'shanter in shape, the coat is of serviceable brown wool, while black breeches with silver buttons at the knees are worn. The vest is fastened by means of a number of small silver chains. Stockings and shoes, the latter with silver buckles, complete the outfit.

The Scottish capital, which is within walking distance of the docks at Leith, has been made a halting place, and the islanders are on their way to Aarhuus for the Danish exhibition. Most of these tourists had never before left their island home.—London Globe.

The KITCHEN CABINET

BE NOT too narrow, husbandmen! but fling
From the full sheaf, with charitable stealth,

The Odoriferous Bulb.

The wholesome onion should be served at least once a week the year round. There are so many pleasing ways that one need not tire of the sameness. A very good way and not well known, is to take the large mild onion, parboil until nearly tender, remove the centers and stuff the cavity with seasoned meat; sausage is good. Place in the oven and bake until quite tender, basting occasionally with butter and water. Serve with a cream sauce poured around them. Onions are also nice served as a scalloped dish with a dash of grated cheese. Try frying them with a bit of pork with new green apples, it will be necessary to add a little sugar, but they will be a treat. Napoleon, it is said, died of indigestion caused by eating fried onion. They certainly are hard to digest, as is all fried food.

Generalities.

Leave a depression in the center of a loaf cake when putting it in the oven, as it is apt to rise higher in the center. Never decrease the heat during the first half of baking, as the cake will be liable to fall.

In baking angel cake in a gas oven, put the cake into a cold oven with the gas of one burner lighted just enough to burn, after 20 minutes increase the heat a very little at a time until fully risen and brown.

Try using one part almond to six parts vanilla for flavoring.

Orange flavor for a sauce or filling for pudding or cake may be obtained by rubbing an orange with loaf sugar. The sugar absorbs the oil from the rind.

Fruit Punch.

Pour one cupful of hot tea infusion over one cupful of sugar, add three-fourths of a cupful of orange juice, one-third of a cupful of lemon juice, and strain over ice in punch bowl. Just before serving add one pint each of ginger ale and apollinaris water.

THE man who rises early may increase his bin and store;
But—goodness—how he gets himself despised by the folks next door."

THE CHEERFUL GROUCH.

On Cast-Off Clothing.

The Cheerful Grouch turned away from haggling with a peddler at the back door: "Shall I let him have it for 50 cents?"

"Yes; anything to get rid of him."

"I feel like Esau when he sold his birthright. I'm ashamed every time I haggle with those old-clothes men at the door. Why do I not give the things direct instead of accepting his pitiful dole? It is a certain amount of sacrifice for him, and does me no good. It robs me of any glory of giving, and the measly pennies are not worth the jar to conscience."

"But the peddler reaches a class of people you would never get at. To them he is a blessing, because he can afford to sell them cheap, after all; so you are an indirect benefactor."

"But why am I not able to reach them 'direct?' Why is there no way to do what my sense of duty dictates? There is not a way; there is no method. There is the strong need of an organized charity which is not a slap in the face of the self-respecting poor."

Everybody was thoughtfud for a moment, silenced by what the Cheerful Grouch conjured up in the way of possibilities of help and charity.

Then one piped up with a laugh to break the uneasy spell. "I have a friend in Missouri who makes money out of the fondness of her servants for her cast-off clothing. Her colored help much prefers her second-hand dresses to the cheap new ones they can afford. Lately she has sold one dress to three different women, each of whom paid a dollar in advance to clinch the bargain. None of the three ever came to claim the gown, so she has three dollars and the dress, too."

"Ah," sighed the C. G, "I'm no such financier as your friend from Missouri. So little a one am I that I even fail to find in the jingling of this coin any help to the hurt that honor feels!"

Primley's Record.

"Why don't you have nice little hands like Mr. Primley, George?"

"Primley? Why, Primley's a sissy."

"Maybe he is, but his wife told me he has buttoned the 27 buttons on the back of her best gown in 17 seconds by a stop watch."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Pious Portuguese Monarch.

The young king of Portugal took command of a regiment of dragoons lately when it marched to the parade ground at Lisbon to receive a new stand of colors and was a conspicuous figure among the kneeling officers during the ceremony which was performed by the priests. Describing the picturesque scene, a writer in a Paris paper says: "The boy king, Manuel, is unusually pious and never misses an opportunity to show this side of his character to his people."

SAM HAISLET has bought his partner's interest in the Lankin Reporter and is now absolute monarch of the shop.

Charlie Fairbanks is proposed as ambassador to the court of St. James but there is a question whether silk stockings that long can be secured.

IT is understood that plates for the Taft banquet at St. Paul are to cost $25 per plate. If Taft had vetoed the Aldrich bill possibly the average citizen could afford the price.

THE Winona Independent has found a new definition of an optimist. He is a republican who thinks the democratic minority in the next house will be smaller than in the present congress.

THE Princeton Union says the people don't understand the tariff and therefore have no objection to it. This might be so except that the people understand higher prices, and they will soon realize that the eastern manufacturers reap all the benefit. When the pocket-book is touched the victim is on the lookout for the thief.

CHAS. R. JONES, chairman of the Prohibition National committee, has figured out that 1,408,098 men, who used to take about four drinks a day, have cut it out altogether. During the same period 7,500,000,000 fewer drinks were "licked up" by American tipplers. The total decrease in the whiskey production during the last two years, he says, is 37,882,607 gallons and the shrinkage in the beer production is 351,000,000 gallons.

THE post office department has just issued a fraud order against a matrimonial agency at Buffalo. In its letters to those who answered its advertisements the concern asked the addressee in each case to send $10 as an evidence of good faith, on receipt of which the applicant would be introduced to the wealthy widow with his marriage to her within sixty days fully guaranteed. Just why they didn't also guarantee that the wealthy widow would die within another six days and thus make the bait good, does not appear.

ALTHOUGH 25,000,000 of the new Lincoln pennies were coined they are not often seen in circulation. The coin resembles a medal in style, and is a redical change from the old form. The bust of Lincoln, with the sentence "In God We Trust" and the word "Liberty" and date 1909 appears on one side, and on the other the words "E. Pluribus Unum," one cent, and the United States of America between two sheaths. The initials of the designer "V. B. D." also are to be seen on the new coin. The fact that the coining of this particular design with the initials on has been stopped, the coins are already, it is said, beginning to increase in value. The coin is also slightly larger than the old cent and it will not work in the slot machines.

THE St. Cloud Times observes, "Let us see," as the blind man said, didn't congress increase the president's salary to $75,000 a year—over $200 per day, to occupy the white house. Now, he is spending weeks in Massachusetts playing golf, boxing with an athlete and running races to reduce his flesh. This is not all he is preparing for several weeks "swing around the circle"—Uncle Sam to pay the bills out of the $25,000 "contingent." Still, some Minnesota editors are hitting at Gov. Johnson because he spends a week out of the state.

A SCIENTIST was lecturing on the sun's heat, and in the course of his remarks said: "It is an established fact that the sun is gradually but surely losing its heat, and in the course of 70 million years it will be exhausted; consequently, this world of ours will be dead and, like the moon, unable to support any form of life." At this juncture a member of his audience rose in an excited manner, and said: "Pardon me, Professor, but how many years did you say it would be before this calamity overtakes us?" The Professor—Seventy millions sir. "Thank God," was the reply. "I thought you said 7 millions!"

AT the University of Missouri is the first working school of journalism in the world. As practical laboratory work, a daily paper with telegraph reports is issued. Walter Williams, its dean, tells of the vicissitudes he encounters in turning laymen into journalists. A student was sent in haste to cover a railroad wreck at a town a few miles away. It was almost time for the daily to go to press and still no word had been received from the young man on the assignment. In desperation Dean Williams telegraphed asking why the story was not forthcoming. The reply was: "Too much excitement. Wait till things quiet down."

"Instead of Cannonizing the congressmen who voted for Cannon, let us can them," suggests the Fairmont Sentinel, and, adds the Alexandria Citizen, "we second the motion. These weak-kneed knucklers to boss dictation failed to represent the wishes of their constituents and the sooner they are retired to private life the better for the country. Lindbergh, Davis and Hammond were the only Minnesota congressmen who made an honest and clean-cut fight for downward tariff revision by opposing the election of Cannon—the recognized instrument of the standpat, high-protection forces. If the voters will measure their representatives squarely by their records, these three congressmen are the only ones who will be returned to congress."

IN spite of all the instructions and advice issued by the postoffice department from time to time, people continue to be careless in the matter of sending money thru the mails. The constant stream of missives flowing into the dead letter office bears eloquent testimony to the fact that the American people are too prone to neglect some of the simplest precautions in conducting their correspondence. Thousands of dollars in small sums annually fail to reach their destination and cannot be returned to senders because addresses can not be found and senders are unknown. A striking case of this kind has just been reported from Washington, where the authorities opened an unclaimed letter and found one hundred dollars in bills placed between two pieces of cardboard while no message or writing of any kind disclosed the name or address of the sender. Result: The government is a bit richer, while some one has paid a big price for a moment's carelessness.

IS IT WORTH WHILE?

There is a significant paragraph the newspaper accounts of the life of E. H. Harriman, the dead railroad king. It is stated that as a boy he could not afford a square meal as a young man he was too busy to eat one, and as an old man indigestion prevented the enjoyment of one.

If this statement is only partially true the query naturally arises, was it worth while? Is the mastery of 85,000 miles of railway worth more than health? With all his millions with all his kingship and all the power it brought, has he had the satisfaction and the pleasure in life that has been granted the most menial lackey under his domination?

Wealth and high station do not compass all the happiness of life. The man or woman given good health, normal appetites and a clear conscience gets more out of life than did E. H. Harriman, even tho he or she never clipped a coupon or grasped a twenty dollar bill.

Power brings responsibility the mediocre know not of; wealth brings cares and worries, and the devotee of frenzied finance is as much a slave as the man at the other end of fortune's ladder.

It is better to be poor than to be sick; it's tough luck to be both poor and sick.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Paynesville Press: A mock session of the legislature is to be held at the state fair. The real thing is about the limit in that respect.

Blackduck American: Tariff reform is still an issue. The cry of the country is still "reduce the cost of living; tax wealth, not poverty."

Royalton Banner: Some men have an idea that in order to get to the top of the ladder, it is necessary to push someone else off. Don't do it. Perhaps an all-wise Providence has put the other man there to aid your plans in future.

Sauk Rapids Sentinel-Free Press: Can't the Republicans of each of the First, Fourth, Fifth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth congressional districts of this state find a good, progressive, anti-Cannon, tariff-revision-downward Republican to represent them in the next congress?

Roseau Region: The enormous crop this year thruout Northern Minnesota will bring wealth to the farmers not merely thru selling the crops, but thru the increased value of the land. Land prices must advance, for unquestionably there will be an increased demand for the kind of land that has produced crops such as are now being harvested.

Appleton Press: Tawney, Taft, Cannon and Aldrich will not last long if we can get rid of Clapp, Nelson, Miller, Volstead, etc. These last mentioned are merely procurers for those tools of the interests. They gather for them from the people that power and influence which they could not get in their own names. There is no surer method of destroying a noxious plant than by cutting off the roots which feed it.

Worthington Advance Herald: The Fairmont Independent is looking about for a candidate for governor. Immediately after election last fall the Independent posted the name of J. F. Jacobson at the head of its editorial column as a candidate for governor in 1910. Last week the Jacobson banner was torn down and thrown in the rubbish pile. Jacobson refused to participate in the ratification meeting to laude Minnesota's faithful representatives in congress, to be held at St. Paul during state fair week, and the Independent charges him with being in sympathy with the Cannon-Aldrich crowd. The Independent's method of trying to force Jacobson on the Republican party two years in advance was out of place. The vote last fall showed that the people did not want Jacobson for governor then, and no doubt the people are still of the same opinion.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

The beginning of a college course is often a hazy undertaking.

And a close-fisted man is often liberal in the use of his fists.

The man who is looking for soft snaps is sure to get many a hard jolt.

Pointed Paragraphs.

New York Press: The richer a man can be the still richer he always wants to be.

It's very hard luck to be an heiress because she'll get married for it.

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential.

Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the Local.

Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.

The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments.

The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, eases nervous excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

S.S.S. CURES MALARIA

Malaria is due to impurities and poisons in the blood. Instead of being rich, strong and healthy, the circulation has become infected with germs of disease which destroy the rich, red corpuscles that furnish nourishment and strength to the body, and reduced this vital fluid to such a weak, watery condition that it is no longer able to keep the system in health, or ward off the countless diseases and disorders that assail it. The loss of these red corpuscles takes the color and glow of health from the cheek, and we see pale, sallow faces and washed out, chalky complexions among the first symptoms of Malaria. But Malaria is a general systemic disease, and as the blood becomes more heavily loaded with its germs we have more serious and complicated symptoms; the impure blood having its effect on all parts of the body. The appetite fails, digestion is weakened, chills and slight fever are frequent, and the sufferer loses energy and ambition because of a constant tired-out and "no account" feeling. The lack of necessary nourishment and healthful qualities in the blood causes boils and abscesses, skin affections, and in some cases sores and ulcers to break out, and sometimes the patient is prostrated with a spell of malarial fever which may leave his health permanently impaired. To cure Malaria both a blood purifier and tonic are necessary, in order to remove the cause and at the same time build up the system from its weakened and run-down condition. S. S. S. is the medicine best fitted for this work. It is the most perfect of all blood purifiers; and the purely vegetable ingredients of which it is composed make it the greatest and safest of all tonics. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation and removes every trace of impurity or poison, and at the same time gives to the blood the health-sustaining qualities it needs. It cures Malaria thoroughly and permanently because it removes the germs and poisons which produce the disease, and while doing this tones up and strengthens every part of the system. When S. S. S. has cleansed the blood the symptoms pass away, the healthy color returns to the complexion, the old tired, depressed feeling is gone, and the entire health is renewed. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

During 1900 I was running a farm on the Mississippi river and became so impregnated with Malaria that for a year I was almost a physical wreck. I tried a number of medicines recommended as blood purifiers, chill cures, and Malaria eradicators, but nothing did me any good until I began to use S. S. S. The result was that after taking it for awhile I was as well and strong as I ever was. I have never had a chill since nor the slightest symptom of Malaria. I hope others will be benefited by my experience, and with that end in view I give this testimonial, knowing that S. S. S. is the best remedy for Malaria.

IMPENDING VISIT OF PRESIDENT TAFT

(Special Correspondence to the Red Lake Falls Gazette.)

St. Paul, Sept. 13—The impending visit of the president of the United States is not exciting that interest even among republicans one would anticipate. Whatever may be true elsewhere, in Minnesota, President Taft has failed to come up to popular expectations, and shares, tho of course not to the same extent, the opprobrium that has been visited on Cannon, Aldrich and Payne. The character of his reception here, so far as it is indicated from the preliminary arrangements, is not well considered if it has in view any idea of making an appeal to the plain people. It is in the hands of the silk-stocking crowd, and the dinner at $25 a plate, with the hoi polloi looking on after the elect have been satiated, is not generally regarded as conforming to the American idea. However that's the Summit avenue way which is certainly more sophisticated and possibly better.

Taft's Program

It is possible that the plain common sense of the president and his essentially democratic instincts may prove effective in enabling him to break thru the gilded cordon with which the St. Paul crowd have made preparations to surround him. There are indications that, whether here or elsewhere, Mr. Taft has made up his mind to have a heart-to-heart talk with the people, and it is intimated that he will speak very plainly here of the failure, which he admits, of republican tariff revision to satisfy popular expectations and his own view of what revision downward really should be. A dispatch from Beverly announces that he will urge the people, if they want that further revision which he admits to be desirable, to elect representatives who will favor it along the lines wished. However, if he will take the advice of the Republican leaders here, the question of tariff reform, if touched upon at all, will be touched upon but lightly. The ostrich is their bird of presage. Wherever you find them you find them with their eyes on the sand, unwilling to see that the people think the party has done anything wrong and counting on the nation's prosperity to blind the people to its delinquencies.

The Wheels Going Round

We have had an opportunity here during fair week to get some insight into what the republican program is to be. For the politicians have been much in evidence. The lobby of the Merchants was their favorite rendezvous. There stalked the Black Eagle of Fergus Falls, swart of visage and gracious of demeanor. The sage of Princeton there hailed his friends with boisterous greeting and ready handshake. A new figure, that of Frank Kellogg, active and alert, marked what many think to be the coming man. There too was Tawney, voluble, emphatic, as ready to tell a good story and laugh at a good joke as to dilate on the growth of national expenditures, and tell how he was the only congressman from Minnesota who really did any effective work in securing lower tariff rates. Nelson was there talking of anything and everything but tariff reform, yet with his ear always to the ground. Heatwole, as usual was out of politics, and incidentally, and this really, somewhat out of health, made it plain from the men we talked with that he is still consulted about third district affairs. Davis of St. Peter accepted with complacence the honors of a popular insurgency.

The Lesser Lights

There were the lesser lights, Hennepin county's political twins, Senators Smith and Calhoun, prominent among them. A. D. Brown of Madison and Tom Collins of Windom did the honors for the republican State Central committee. Col. Wilkinson conducted on behalf of the Great Northern his board of conciliation and advice, and had frequent whispered consultation with his political lieutenants. Doc. Gates of Kenyon was there to push his campaign for lieutenant governor; Eberhart, the smiling exponent of his department and erudition; representatives and state senators by the score, Dar Reese, Nelson of Hallock, Charley Haubt, U. S. District Attorney; Bill Rich, Archie Hayes—all the big and little wheels of the Republican machine.

Harmony Talk

Senator Ed. Smith of Hennepin county is a good political weather guage. Ed. is smooth and soft-spoken and good humored, and knows what the men want who furnish Republican politicians with the sinews of war. More than ever this year he makes it his business to confide in men of influence his yearning for harmony We must forget our differences, he says; we must get together; we must win; we must unite on a candidate for governor on whom we can all agree. Who do you think the most available man? I really haven't any choice. We are ready in Hennepin county to support anyone, but what do you think of Ripley Brower? Now there's a candidate for you who would sweep the state. Ed's program for political peace is a peach. The lion and the lamb must lie down together with the lamb inside.

The Oracles Consulting

Nevertheless he is making headway and he's moreover coming to be recognized as the most astute of the local republican leaders. The other night Dar Reese gave a little dinner party. Ed Smith was there, and Tawney and Senator Seward and a few other choice spirits who pulled the strings that pulled off the demonstration to the insurgent congressmen. For two hours or more they had their heads together, and then Ed. slipped over to the Merchants where he met Senator Nelson and went to his room. They were closeted together from half-past ten until half-past one. After that Ed. camped in St. Paul and continued to talk harmony.

Senatorial Prospects

Which all has its bearing on the Senatorial squable, altho about that Senator Smith isn't saying a word. It's a peculiar situation. It's worrying Clapp. Always before he has had Smith, who in himself doesn't amount to much, but the interests of which Senator Smith is the political representative and agent which amount to a great deal behind him. Now although he has been playing up to them he can't for the life of him find out whether the Great Northern crowd the Steel Trust, the lumbering and the elevator interests are behind him or not. If they are, what do they mean by permitting Frank Kellogg to be here making trouble? Why don't they snuff him out? Senator Clapp wants to know. He has been relying on support which now he can't be sure of. It's essential that he should know. He's in the fight to stay, to be sure. But the kind of fight he would put up would be different if he only had popular sentiment to depend upon. Really one cannot help but sympathize with him in his dilemma.

Up Against It

Then there's a lot of governorship talk. It's no use. You can't get it out of the head of the average Republican politician that Governor Johnson no matter what he says, has really away down in his heart made up his mind to be a candidate for governor for a fourth term. They have all kinds of plausible arguments to prove that the governor must run. And equally down in their hearts they know that they can't beat him. That accounts for Ripley Brower's reticence "Rip" hasn't any sand. He hasn't the courage to lead a forlorn hope. He's a candidate of the politicians. If they had their way he would be now in the open, and heaven and earth would be moved to induce harmony. If "Rip" were his own man and had the nerve he could this minute capture the nomination hands down, and stand as good a chance, as anyone of making a winning fight. But he hasn't the initiative to outline a policy nor the high courage to go straight to the people.

Other Candidates

Who else is there? Eberhart? Notwithstanding his deportment and his scholastic attainments he isn't of gubernatorial size and is beginning to realize it. Bob Dunn? A red rag in the face of the Mugwump bull. Jacobson? In the down and out class. Heatwole? The politicians only want the chance to stick their knives into him. So they are beginning to talk of President Northrop, and the curious thing about it is that it flatters him. He likes it. Of course he says he's not a candidate. He isn't. Equally of course he says his name was used without his consent. So it was. But this can be depended on. If the Republican politicians agree and if President Northrop is tendered the unanimous nomination by the Republican party, he will be it's candidate. But what's the use? They won't agree. They couldn't use Northrop. And unless the Republican machine can be assured of a free hand in the distribution of the state's patronage and that the party's policy will be so shaped that they will have friends to whom they may successfully appeal for campaign funds, they would just about as soon have the Democrats run things. What's the use of office without the spoils?

A Judicial Contest

They are likely to have an interesting time up in the seventh judicial district when the election comes round It is thought that Judge Baxter, who is quite an old man, will scarcely care to serve another term and will retire at the close of the present one. There are in the district quite a number of prominent attorneys, who are believed to be ambitious to sit on the bench. There is Taylor of St. Cloud, a strong man who thinks he is in line for the succession: Charley Haupt of Fergus Falls will have strong backing due to the local feeling that the judgeship should be retained at the Red River Valley capitol. And now there is talk of Peterson, of Long Prairie, at present assistant to the attorney general and really the strongest man in the office. Whatever the outcome they are likely to have a good judge.

A Litigous Community

A new judgeship was created by the last legislature for the fifteenth judicial district to which C. W. Stanton was appointed. The argument against creating the office at the time was that the judge would have nothing to do. This does not appear to be the result. Judge Stanton, who was in town the other day, says he has been overwhelmed in litigation. He tried 117 civil suits from Itasca county alone since he has been in office, and the criminal calendar at the approaching term of court is very large. He attributes this in part to the character of the population in the lumbering and mining districts, and very largely to the manner in which the liquor traffic is conducted. Saloons are as common as huckle-berries and in most sections are a law unto themselves.

OUR CAVALRYMEN LEAD THE WORLD

By EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT 1909 BY W. A. PATTERSON

WASHINGTON—The riding test for army officers which was ordered by Theodore Roosevelt has not been discontinued under the Taft administration. From some of the comments that have been made on these "long, hard rides," it would appear that the public believes that the army officers never were given an opportunity prior to the Roosevelt administration to show what they could do in the way of covering long distances in quick time. No army in the world, perhaps, has had the same opportunities to test the endurance of cavalry horses as has the small regular force of the United States.

EX-PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

The long, level stretches of the plains and the activity of the marauding Indian mounted on his tireless broncho have been the conditions which gave to Uncle Sam's cavalrymen his matchless chances for long forced mounted marches. Col. Theodore Ayrault Dodge, U. S. A., collected the official records of long distance cavalry rides, and has made them public in a book so that they may be compared with the performances of the soldier horsemen of other nations. Col. Dodge declares specifically that he has rejected all "hearsay rides, of which there is no end," and has accepted only those proved by official reports. Col. Dodge says that Capt. S. F. Fountain, United States cavalry, in the year 1891, with a detachment of his troop, rode 84 miles in eight hours. This record is vouched for, and it is better than that once made by the Natal Mounted Rifles by about four hours, the distance being within one mile of that made in South Africa. For actual speed this forced march stands perhaps at the head of the American army record, though other rides have been more remarkable.

In the year 1879, when the Utes succeeded in getting some United States troops into what was afterward known as Thornburg's "rat hole," several mounted couriers succeeded in slipping through the circling line of savages. All of them reached Merritt's column, 170 miles distant, in less than 24 hours. The exact time was not taken, for, as Col. Dodge puts it, "rescue was of more importance than records."

It must be understood, of course, that all these American rides were made without changing horses. The steed at the start was the steed at the finish. The best rider, according to cavalry experts, is not the man who takes a five-barred gate or who can ride standing, but the man who by instinct feels the condition of his horse, and, though getting the most out of the animal, knows best how to conserve his strength.

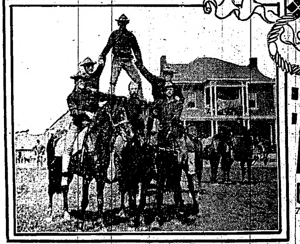
Gen. Lawton in the year 1876, rode from Red Cloud agency, Nebraska, to Sidney in the same state, a distance of 125 miles, in 26 hours. He was carrying important dispatches for Gen. Crook, and though the road was bad his mount was in good condition when Lawton, looking five years older than he did the day before, handed over his bundle of papers to the black-bearded general.

Gen. Merritt has a forced march record that has no American parallel when the conditions of his journey are considered. He was ordered in the fall of 1879 to the relief of Payne's command, which was surrounded by hostile Indians. Merritt's command consisted of four troops of cavalry, but at the last moment he was ordered to add to his force a battalion of infantry. The "dough boys" were loaded into army wagons drawn by mules, and with the cavalry at the flanks the relief column started. The distance to be traversed was 170 miles, and it was made, notwithstanding the handicap of the wagons and trails that were muddy and sandy by turns, in just 66 hours. At the end of the march the troopers went into the fight, and in the entire command not one horse showed a lame leg or a saddle sore.

Four troopers of the Fourth cavalry who had volunteered for the particular service, were sent in the summer of 1870 from Fort Harney to Fort Warner with dispatches, and were told to make the best time possible without killing their horses. The men were on their mettle. They made the distance, 140 miles 20 miles of the way being through loose sand, in 22 hours, the actual marching time being 18 hours and 30 minutes. At Fort Warner they rested one day, and returned to Harney on the same horses at the uniform rate of 60 miles a day. Capt. Edward G. Fechet started at midnight for the relief of the Indian scouts who had been sent out to arrest Sitting Bull, and, who, after killing that chief, were beleaguered in a small hut by his followers. Fechet took an ambulance wagon and a Hotchkiss gun with him. The gun carriage broke down and he was compelled to fasten the trail of the piece to the tailboard of the ambulance and thus drag it along. Notwithstanding this handicap he made the first 45 miles in less than seven hours. He fought and drove off the young Sioux bucks, then scouted the country for ten miles, gave his troopers some breakfast and returned to the fort. Fourteen hours were consumed in covering 90 miles of ground.

The cavalry horses of the American army have undergone these endurance and speed tests carrying weights of more than 200 pounds and without any training other than that received in the ordinary course of frontier scouting and daily drill evolutions. The greatest military ride record, as it appears on paper, is that of the Austrian Count Stahrenberg, who rode one horse 350 miles in 71 hours. The animal, however, carried only the count's weight, 128 pounds; it had been specially trained for months to undergo the endurance test, and during the whole time of the ride it was kept up on stimulants. The horse died within 24 hours after the completion of its task. Col. Dodge, in his summary of remarkable rides, tells of a professional express rider whom he personally knew, who for many months carried mail from El Paso to Chihuahau through a hostile Apache country. This man on one horse, a broncho, regularly made 300 miles in 60 hours, and then resting his mount for four days, made the return trip. As this was not a cavalry achievement it is not used for purposes of comparison. Touching the performance, however, the military writer says, that "excepting the ass, there is perhaps no creature on earth so stubbornly enduring as the broncho."

Col. Dodge does not think that if tests were made there would be much difference between the records which English and American soldiers would register. He says that a composite picture made of 500 British and of 500 American troopers would show that the three lines which establish the "seat" of the rider are practically the same, and that upon this and the proper care of the horse depend largely the matters of distance accomplished and speed maintained.



THE PYRAMID DRILL AT FORT MYER

One of the longest and most perilous rides ever made by an American soldier was that of a private in F Company of the Seventh infantry.

Early in July in the year 1876 the forces of Gen. Terry were in the field at the junction of the Big Horn and Yellowstone rivers in the Territory of Montana. Only ten days before Gen. Custer and his squadrons of the Seventh cavalry had perished at the hands of the Sioux under Sitting Bull. A detachment of troops pushing forward in search of the "yellow-haired white chief" had found the mutilated bodies of the slain, with the little heaps of empty cartridges at their sides, telling mutely the story of a desperately heroic defense. The detachment had joined Terry and the story of the Custer massacre was told.

TRAINING CAVALRY HORSES TO LIE DOWN AT COMMAND

The whole country to the northeast and the south was swarming with the Sioux not yet sated with slaughter. To the southeast 200 miles away, near the headquarters of the Powder river, in the Territory of Wyoming, lay the command of Gen. Crook. It was imperatively necessary that the situation of affairs just south of the Yellowstone should be made known to the general commanding the southeastern forces.

Between Terry and Crook was an unbroken wilderness inhabited only by wild animals and wilder men. With Terry's column were six tried scouts and plainsmen. They knew every inch of the country, every trail, every hiding place in the mountain spurs and every patch of timber on the plains. To these men were intrusted the dispatches of the commanding officer, with instructions to carry them southeastward to the camp of Crook. The scouts started on their journey. Inside of eight hours all of them were back and the report to Terry was that no man could attempt the journey to Powder river and live.

In F Company of the Seventh infantry was a private named James Bell. He had acquired a knowledge of the country in the campaigns in which he had served against the Sioux. His knowledge, however, was but a tithe of that held by the plainsmen, and his acquaintance with the ways of the Indians was as nothing to theirs, yet Private James Bell went to Gen. Terry's headquarters and volunteered to carry the dispatches through the heart of the hostile country and to deliver them to Gen. Crook, or else, if it must be, to forfeit his life.

Terry asked the man if he knew fully the danger of the undertaking. Bell's answer was: "The scouts came back." In the four words he expressed the whole thing, for the scouts never before had turned in their tracks.

Private Bell took his rations, a full supply of ammunition, his rifle and his revolver, and mounting a horse he started southeast to the wilderness to look death in the face.

His course took him close to the scene of the Custer massacre, where less than two weeks before 5,000 Sioux had gathered for the killing. He traveled only at night, and all day long he lay hidden in the timber or in the gulches of the foothills.

Two hours after sunset on the second night he left his day's hiding place and set his course southward along a range of low hills. He turned aside to skirt a bit of timber, and as he came to the edge of the trees his mount showed symptoms of uneasiness.

Bell dropped from his horse and stole forward. He saw not more than 100 yards ahead of him a war party of fully 50 Indians making preparations to camp for the night. They had come apparently from a direction opposite to that taken by the courier, for he had not crossed their trail. He stole back, remounted and made a detour, passing the Indian encampment on the right and without awakening their suspicions.

Notwithstanding the rough nature of the country through which he was passing and the necessity of sparing his horse, Bell made 40 miles in that second night's ride. When it was within two hours of sunrise he struck a small creek with a bottom of sand and pebbles. He knew that if the war party which he had passed the night before should find his trail that it would be followed, and that the reds would not spare their ponies in the attempt to overtake the wilderness messenger.

For two miles Bell led his horse down the bed of the creek, thus completely obliterating his trail, but he knew that the hoof marks showing where he had taken to the water were telltale witnesses of his subterfuge.

He reached a part of the creek where the banks were heavily overgrown with bushes. He pushed the green growth aside from right to left and sent his horse through. Then he covered the marks of the passage as well as he could, and finally crawled up on the bank himself, covering his own trail.

He found a hiding place for the day in a ravine about 300 yards from the bank of the creek, and after feeding his horse, and eating his own breakfast he put all thought of sleep aside, and climbing to a hilltop he watched the vicinity of the creek.

Bell believed that the reds could not have found his trail, if they had found it at all, until near sunrise and he knew that if they followed him it would take them the better part of the day to reach his hiding place and that by that time his horse would be fresh and their horses jaded.

At three o'clock in the afternoon he saw something that set his heart beating, brave man though he was. The war party was breaking through the underbrush on the bank of the creek and Bell knew that his trail had been followed and that he had but a moment's time to save his life and his message.

He ran down the slope, vaulted on to his horse and shot out into the open around the base of the hill.

The reds chased the courier for five miles, firing now and again, but he distanced them and after two more nights of peril he gave Terry's message into the hands of Crook.

James Bell was given a medal of honor, and for five years he was a messenger in the headquarters of the department of the lakes in Chicago. Few people realized that the quiet unassuming "errand man" in the Pullman building was the courier who had taken on himself a mission that tried plainsmen had not dared to attempt to fulfill.

The Home.

Home and home life must never become commonplace. The little surprises, the remembrances of the birthday, the unexpected treat, the pleasure earned for one by the sacrifice of another—all these belong under our head of spiritual exercises. Nor is there any scene of our life which so demands such exercise as this familiar scene of home, which has to be reset every day.—Edward Everett Hale.

MAKE TROUBLE FOR CAPTORS

Swordfish Put up Fierce Fight Before They Become Part of Day's Haul.

The arrivals of swordfish at T wharf the other day were the heaviest for some time, eight vessels bringing 568 fish, says the Boston Herald. In addition to the exceptionally large catch nearly all the arrivals reported trouble on their trips. Nearly every boat reported damage from the attacks of the giant fish and two had narrow escapes from collision in the fog.

On the schooner Angie B. Watson, Capt. Schofield, off Georges, one of the crew, Wesley Wallace, was severely cut in the leg by the attack of a maddened fish, which drove its sword through the bottom of the dory. The fish was pierced with the lily iron from the "pulpit" on the schooner and in going after it in the dory Wallace met with his accident. He had got the float in when the fish headed in his direction. Before he could move out of the way the big sword came inboard, piercing Wallace's left instep and tearing the side of the leg.

The Metacomet, Capt. Simmons, met with a fierce swordfish bent on doing harm to something. Its attack was so fierce that the stout, bony sword went through the three-inch plank just at the port side of the forefoot, cutting its way clear in until six inches of it showed inside the vessel. The struggles of the fish broke the sword, leaving part of it still in the plank.

The schooner Tecumseh had the worst experience with the fish. Three of her four dories were pierced by swordfish, some of them several times. The Minerva had one of her dories pierced also, and the man in it had a narrow escape from being injured. The Albert W. Black also had a dory pierced.

Kisses and Science.

Doctors have again been trying the experiment of having a girl kissed by a man of hairless lip and then by one with a mustache, the game of the scientific sharps being to ascertain which salute resulted in the greater deposit of microbes. However, the merits of any such experiment would be decided by the girl on wholly different grounds.

PATIENT SUFFERING.

Many Women Think They Are Doomed to Backache.

It is not right for women to be always ailing with backache, urinary ills, headache and other symptoms of kidney disease. There is a way to end these troubles quickly. Mrs. John H. Wright, 606 East First St., Mitchell, S. D., says: "I suffered ten years with kidney complaint and a doctor told me I would never get more than temporary relief. A dragging pain and lameness in my back almost disabled me. Dizzy spells come and went and the kidney secretions were irregular. Doan's Kidney Pills rid me of these troubles and I feel better than for years past."

When the Umbrella Took Fire.

Thomas Simpson, the Detroit malleable iron man, is a grave and dignified person, but once he made a joke.

He was sitting with a party of friends, one of whom was smoking an enormous cigar. The friend had difficulty in keeping the cigar going, and by his repeated lightings had frazzled the end of it until it was about twice its original size. But he kept bravely at it.

Suddenly Simpson began to laugh.

"I was wondering what Jim would do when that umbrella he is smoking begins to blaze," he said.—Saturday Evening Post.

Laundry work at home would be much more satisfactory if the right Starch were used. In order to get the desired stiffness, it is usually necessary to use so much starch that the beauty and fineness of the fabric is hidden behind a paste of varying thickness, which not only destroys the appearance, but also affects the wearing quality of the goods. This trouble can be entirely overcome by using Defiance Starch, as it can be applied much more thinly because of its greater strength than other makes.

AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Willimantic, Conn.—"For five years I suffered untold agony from female troubles, causing backache, irregularities, dizziness and nervous prostration. It was impossible for me to walk upstairs without stopping on the way. I tried three different doctors and each told me something different. I received no benefit from any of them, but seemed to suffer more. The last doctor said nothing would restore my health. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see what it would do, and I am restored to my natural health."—Mrs. ETTA DONOVAN, Box 299, Willimantic, Conn.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills, and suffering women owe it to themselves to at least give this medicine a trial. Proof is abundant that it has cured thousands of others, and why should it not cure you?

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

STOP BURYING ALIVE

Campaign Started in England to Prevent Premature Burial.

Appointment of a Professional Verifier of Deaths in Each Coroner's District Suggested in Report to Home Secretary.

London.—The appointment of a professional verifier of deaths in every coroner's district to remove the haunting fear of being buried alive experienced by many nervous and aged people was one of the interesting suggestions made by Dr. Walter Hadwen in his evidence before the departmental committee appointed by the home secretary to inquire into the law relating to coroners' inquests.

The establishment of waiting mortuaries where the professional verifier would watch for positive proof of death was another of Dr. Hadwen's propositions. These would be pleasing places, with ornaments and flowers, like those in Munich and Berlin.

The evidence he had collected went to show that there was no definite, undeniable proof of death apart from incipient putrefaction. There were instances, Dr. Hadwen told the committee, of persons who had come to life after they had been placed in the waiting mortuaries.

Curious cases of death counterfeits were narrated by Dr. Hadwen from his own experience. During the Gloucester smallpox epidemic of 1896 a child believed to be dead of confluent smallpox was removed from hospital to the mortuary. Next day a gardener passing by the window of the mortuary heard the cries of the child. The little one was carried back to the ward and recovered.

In another case Dr. Hadwen had been attending a child of three suffering from convulsions with subsequent exhaustion. There seemed no hope of recovery, and he left the little patient one night thinking he had seen him for the last time.

Next day when the doctor reached the cottage the blinds were drawn and the broken-hearted parents were weeping by the side of the little body, which lay covered with a white sheet, and the undertaker was expected to bring the coffin in a few minutes. Looking down at the supposed dead child, the doctor fancied he could detect the slightest movement of the chest. He tried the pulse, but failed to detect a beat. A stethoscope revealed a heart beat, and after hot flannels had been applied and the body massaged for three hours the child was able to take nourishment.

FORGETTING ART OF WALKING

Invaluable Therapeutic Effects of Pedestrian Exercise a Discovery of Recent Hygiene.

London.—"Walking is going out of fashion; if something is not done it will soon become a lost exercise," declared a physician who, supporting the Lancet's contention, affirms that the ill effects arising from a lack of healthful exercise—due to laziness and to the motor car, tube, and other conveniences of travel nowaday—form one of the greatest problems of the moment as regards public health.

"Young men are forgetting how to walk," he added. "Yet walking is undoubtedly the exercise for city men. However busy they are they can find the short time daily which is the only demand this exercise makes. Its very simplicity makes some people discount it and turn to elaborate exercises. Yet it is nature's exercise.

"One of the most striking discoveries of quite recent physiology is connected with the therapeutic effect of walking. The a 'on of walking—not to use too technical terms—pumps energy through the frame as does no other means known to science. The walkers are the health winners, and it may be said that walking has a moral effect not less destinct than its physical effect.

"A great employer of labor has said that all his foremen over a long succession of years were country-bred men, and he attributed their success solely to the fact that they walked to their work, with the result that they arrived beyond comparison more fit and vigorous, not to add more punctually, than the 'trammers.'

"Bouts of a most praiseworthy zeal for exercise—Swedish exercises, Japanese exercises, American exercises—come over people, and these play their part. But they are rarely regularly practiced, largely because they are dull, and at the best they are no proper substitute for the natural, and, it is now discovered, the irreplacable, exercise of walking."

Don't think a man is always in the wrong because he doesn't agree with you.

MILKMEN SAVE OHIO BABIES

Defy City Ordinance for the Purpose of Allaying Suffering Among Children.

Lorain, O.—For the purpose of allaying any suffering due to the scarcity of milk and to save any infants whose lives may be dependent upon fresh milk, the law and the milk famine were partially broken here by the milk dealers.

Mayor King declared that he would arrest any dealer who delivered milk without a license. To obtain a license it was necessary for the dealers to obtain their milk from dairymen whose cows had passed the tuberculin test. This the milkmen refused to do, and when it was made compulsory by a city ordinance the dealers decided to boycott the city.

As a result the 30,000 residents of this city were without milk. About 50 per cent. of the usual supply is now being delivered.

Gets 2,740 Pennies.

Mason City, Ia.—An express package containing 2,740 pennies is just now disturbing Merchant Liebsohn of Bancroft. The pennies came from Dysart, Iowa, but there is no way of finding out who the sender was. He paid 43 cents express charges and then put the pail on the floor.

When Liebsohn broke the cover, out rolled the pennies in every direction. Clerks and assistants went to work counting them, and found the above number. No one owes him conscience money, he is not given to tricks of any kind, and he is very anxious now to get a soothsayer to explain this mystery.

The pennies have been deposited and will be held until further developments.

A Robber with Good Points.

Young Musician Runs Away

Boy of Eight Takes Treasured Violin and Leaves to Gain Fame and Wealth.

New York.—Adolph Dernwick, eight years old, has gone forth into the world to seek his fortune. His only equipment for the perilous venture consists of a stout heart and a beloved violin.

With the heedlessness of his few years he gave no thought to the broken hearts he would leave behind him in the little home at 25 East Third street, Mount Vernon, when he started upon his journey. To the sorrowing, tearful mother, the thoughtful, depressed father he simply left a note saying he was going away to make his own living.

When his mother returned home the other day she found the note from her son. She went immediately to the nursery. There she found the little fire engine with its always prancing horses halfway across the floor, in a corner a half completed house of blocks and near it the miniature train of cars "on a siding."

For London-Berlin 'Phone.

Berlin.—The possibility of direct telephone communication between London and Berlin is under discussion by the British and German governments. It is considered impracticable to lay a cable from the German to the English coast, and therefore it is proposed to interest either Holland or Belgium in the project and connect London with Berlin by way of one of those countries.

NEW CUSTOMS LAWS

Amended to Conform to Requirements of Payne Law, Issued by Treasury.

Acting Secretary Reynolds Sends Out Regulations Governing Free Entry of Domestic Exported, and Then Brought Back Here.

Washington, D. C.—The customs regulations governing the free entry of domestic products exported and afterwards brought back to this country, amended to conform to the requirements of the Payne law, have been issued by Acting Secretary of the Treasury Reynolds.

As a result of a recommendation made by the attorney general about a year ago, exporters of domestic whisky will have to produce a sworn certificate declaring the whisky to be in the same condition as when exported in order to obtain entry of the goods free of duty.

The new law exempts domestic animals from the duty-free provisions when returned to this country. They will have to pay the same duty when reimported as foreign animals. The regulation permitting the entry free of duty of domestic animals exported for racing and exhibition purposes is not affected by the other provision.

Moving picture films of American manufacture are entitled to free importation, after having been exported, only if they are damaged or light struck, so as to be unsuitable for any other purpose than the recovery of the constituent materials.

The new regulations also provide for the entry duty free of iron or steel drums used for the shipment of acids, of either domestic or foreign manufacture, which shall have been actually exported from the United States.

Preparatory to the collection of the tax placed upon foreign built yachts by the Payne tariff law, Acting Secretary of the Treasury Reynolds forwarded instructions to the collector of customs at New York to inquire of owners of such yachts whether they desire to pay the tonnage tax of $7 a ton annually or the ad valorem duty of 35 per cent. of the appraised value of the yachts at the time the duty is collected.

Yachts chartered or owned by Americans for a period of six months or more will hereafter be appraised at the first collection district in which they arrive. The next tax is to be collected on the 1st of September, and the customs officials are now preparing a list of the foreign built pleasure-boats owned or chartered by Americans.

Internal revenue collectors have been instructed to canvass their respective districts and obtain for the treasury department a list of the corporations which will be subject to the new corporation tax embodied in the Payne tariff law. Included in the list will be information regarding the amount of the capital stock of the corporations and their places of business. The corporations are divided into five classes—financial and commercial, industrial and manufacturing, public service, mercantile, and miscellaneous. This information is to be gathered preliminary to the determination of the regulations of the collection of the corporation tax.

TREATS SICK BABY ON CAR

Father of Eighteen, Familiar with Children's Ailments, Saves Infant's Life.

New York.—James Maher is the father of 18 children and what he doesn't know about convulsions, measles, mumps, whooping cough, and such things wouldn't take a doctor long to learn. Maher also is inspector for the Coney Island & Brooklyn railway.

A young mother had a young baby in a street car the other afternoon and the infant got convulsions and the mother got hysterics, and the other women in the car got into the street. The motorman stopped the car.

"Here," yelled Maher as he got aboard and took in the situation, "get to that drug store on the corner quick and bring back some mustard and a dishpan of hot water."

The motorman soon was back with them.

Maher swiftly took the baby's clothes off and had its feet in a hot mustard bath, while the women gathered about and wondered why none of them had thought of it.

"You've saved the kid's life," said a surgeon from Seney hospital.

Buying Warship for Greece.

Seattle, Wash.—Members of the local Greek Catholic church raised $1,000 and turned it over to their pastor to assist in building of a battleship to be given to Greece in case of war with Turkey. Rev. M. G. Andreade, in charge of the fund, said that altogether $35,000 had been raised by Greeks in this county.

OLD WORLD FAST DRYING UP

Many Small Lakes Have Disappeared Entirely and Larger Ones Are Dwindling Rapidly.

Berlin.—According to inquiries the result of which is published in the Umschau, central Europe seems to be drying up, as is East Russia and West Asia. Comparisons of the number and size of lakes show hundreds of cases of complete disappearance and many more of diminution of area, partly caused, of course, by silting up. By comparing a map of Zurich Canton, made in 1660, with the conditions to-day, Herr Walser shows that of 149 lakes only 40 remain unchanged, 36 have more or less dwindled in size, and 73 small lakes have completely disappeared. In South Bavaria during the last century 43 lakes and lakelets have disappeared and similar desiccation has taken place in the two other districts named.

Care in Preparing Food.

In recent years scientists have proved that the value of food is measured largely by its purity; the result is the most stringent pure food laws that have ever been known.

One food that has stood out prominently as a perfectly clean and pure food and which was as pure before the enactment of these laws as it could possibly be is Quaker Oats; conceded by the experts to be the ideal food for making strength of muscle and brain. The best and cheapest of all foods. The Quaker Oats Company is the only manufacturer of oatmeal that has satisfactorily solved the problem of removing the husks and black specks which are so annoying when other brands are eaten. If you are convenient to the store buy the regular size packages; if not near the store, buy the large size family packages.

BABY HORRIBLY BURNED.

By Boiling Grease—Skin All Came Off One Side of Face and Head—Thought Her Disfigured for Life.

"My baby was sitting beside the fender and we were preparing the breakfast when the frying-pan full of boiling grease was upset and it went all over one side of her face and head. Some one wiped the scald with a towel, pulling the entire skin off. We took her to a doctor. He tended her a week and gave me some stuff to put on. But it all festered and I thought the baby was disfigured for life. I used about three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and it was wonderful how it healed. In about five weeks it was better and there wasn't a mark to tell where the scald had been. Her skin is just like velvet. Mrs. Hare, 1, Henry St., South Shields, Durham, England, March 22, 1908."

Consumptives Need Not Leave Home.

Consumption can be cured, or arrested, in any section of the United States, and the percentage of cures in the east and the west is nearly the same. Any physician, therefore, who sends a person to the southwest without sufficient funds, or in an advanced or dying stage of the disease, is guilty of cruelty to his patient. Renewed efforts are being made to stop this practice, and to encourage the building of small local hospitals in every city and town in the country. Attempts are also being made in Southern California and in Texas to exclude indigent consumptives or to send them back to the east.

Enough Till Eternity.

The biggest marble quarry in operation in the world lies almost within a stone's throw of the heart of West Rutland, Vt. Around its mouth is a stock of 12,000 pieces of finished marble. There is a great gap in the hillside. The marble crops out as bare of soil or vegetation as a billiard ball. You can walk over that hill and never step on anything but marble, and after two score years of blasting and drilling they don't know how deep the deposit lies. It seems there's enough marble in that one hill for an eternity.

SENSE ABOUT FOOD

Facts About Food Worth Knowing.

It is a serious question sometimes to know just what to eat when a person's stomach is out of order and most foods cause trouble.

Grape-Nuts food can be taken at any time with the certainty that it will digest. Actual experience of people is valuable to anyone interested in foods.

A Terre Haute woman writes: "I had suffered with indigestion for about four years, ever since an attack of typhoid fever, and at times could eat nothing but the very lightest food, and then suffer such agony with my stomach I would wish I never had to eat anything.

"I was urged to try Grape-Nuts and since using it I do not have to starve myself any more, but I can eat it at any time and feel nourished and satisfied, dyspepsia is a thing of the past, and I am now strong and well.

"My husband also had an experience with Grape-Nuts. He was very weak and sickly in the spring. Could not attend to his work. He was under the doctor's care but medicine did not seem to do him any good until he began to leave off ordinary food and use Grape-Nuts. It was positively surprising to see the change in him. He grew better right off, and naturally he had none but words of praise for Grape-Nuts.

"Our boy thinks he cannot eat a meal without Grape-Nuts, and he learns so fast at school that his teacher and other scholars comment on it. I am satisfied that it is because of the great nourishing elements in Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

It contains the phosphate of potash from wheat and barley which combine with albumen to make the gray matter to daily refill the brain and nerve centers.

It is a pity that people do not know what to feed their children. There are many mothers who give their youngsters almost any kind of food and when they become sick begin to pour the medicine down them. The real way is to stick to proper food and be healthy and get along without medicine and expense.

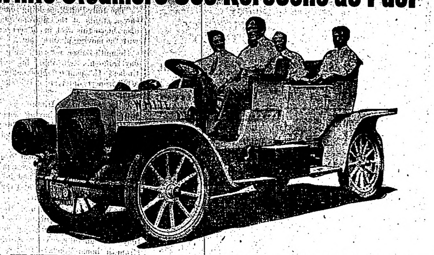
White Steamers Use Kerosene as Fuel



THE WHITE STEAMER WHICH MADE A SUCCESSFUL PUBLIC DEMONSTRATION OF KEROSENE AS FUEL ON THE RECENT 2650-MILE GLIDDEN TOUR.

The most interesting announcement ever made in connection with the automobile industry was undoubtedly that made a month or two ago to the effect that the new models of the White Steam Cars could be run on kerosene, or coal oil, instead of gasoline. Everyone at once recognized that the use of the new fuel would add materially to the advantages which the White already possessed over other types of cars. There were some people, however, who were sceptical as to whether or not the new fuel could be used with complete success, and, therefore, the makers of the White Car, the White Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, determined to make a public demonstration of the new fuel in the 1909 Glidden Tour.

From the standpoint of the public, no test more satisfactory could have been selected. First of all, the distance covered on the Glidden Tour, from Detroit to Denver and thence to Kansas City, was 2650 miles. This was certainly more than sufficient to bring out any weaknesses, if such had existed. Still more important was the fact that the car was at all times while on the road under the supervision of observers named by those who entered other contesting cars. Therefore, it would have been impossible for the driver of the White to have even tightened a bolt without the fact being noted and a penalty inflicted. At night the cars were guarded by Pinkerton detectives and could not be approached by any one.

The complete success of the new fuel while on the 2650-mile public test and the advantages gained through its use were well described in the following dispatch which the correspondent of the New York Sun sent to his paper at the conclusion of the tour:

"A feature of the tour which was watched with special interest was that the White Steamer used kerosene, or 'coal oil,' as fuel instead of gasoline. The new fuel worked splendidly throughout the 2650-mile journey, and all claims made in its behalf were fully proven. First of all, as regards cheapness, the White driver secured kerosene all along the route from 6 cents to 10 cents cheaper per gallon than was paid for gasoline. Secondly, the new fuel was handled without any precautions, and it was not unusual to see kerosene being poured into the fuel tank while the crew of the car and an interested crowd stood by with lighted cigars and cigarettes. At the finish of the tour, the White was the only car permitted by the authorities to enter Convention Hall, where the technical examination took place, without draining its fuel tank. Thirdly, the new fuel proved to be absolutely without smoke or smell. Fourthly, kerosene could be purchased at whatever part of the route was most convenient, and not once during the trip through the ten States of the Middle West was there found a grocery store where kerosene was not readily and cheaply obtainable. Finally, the amount of fuel used on the trip showed that kerosene is at least fifteen per cent. more efficient, gallon for gallon, than gasoline. The car in other respects made a most creditable showing, and there was the usual rivalry among the observers to be assigned to the White so that they could ride with the maximum of comfort. The only adjustments or repairs charged against the car during the long trip were tightening a lubricator pipe and wiring a damaged mud guard. These penalties were not inflicted until more than 2000 miles had been completed with an absolutely perfect score."

A particularly interesting feature of the new White Steamer is that either kerosene or gasoline may be used as fuel. The necessary adjustments so that the fuel may be changed from kerosene to gasoline, or vice versa, may be made in a couple of minutes; but so completely successful has kerosene proved to be, that it is not believed that any purchasers will care to use gasoline.

The White Company report that the demand for their new steam cars—both the $2000-model and the $4000-model—exceed their most sanguine expectations. It is evident that the combination of steam—the power which everyone understands and has confidence in—with kerosene—the fuel which everyone has on hand and can handle without any danger—is thoroughly appreciated by up-to-date purchasers of automobiles.

GOVERNOR JOHNSON HAS PASSED AWAY

The Entire State is in Mourning—Funeral Held This Afternoon.

Governor Johnson Was an Exceptional Figure in Public Life.

The unfeeling hand of Death has taken to its cruel grasp the foremost and best-loved man in Minnesota, and today the entire state is in mourning.

Governor Johnson was an exceptional figure in the political world. Nominally a democrat, people of all parties were his friends and supporters. With a strong character and a high sense of public duty, he combined a pleasing and commanding personality which made him master of the politics of the state. Not only in Minnesota was he loved and revered, but throughtout the nation he was recognized as a man of unusual strength and ability, and it was all but a foregone conclusion that in the next campaign he would be the nominee of his party for the highest office in the land.

Not, though, so much as a politician or as a public official did he reach the hearts of the people as by his democratic manner and his large sympathy. He was always interested in the common things of life, and he never forgot the pleasant smile nor the kindly interest for the lowly and down trodden. Never a fanatic nor even a radical, he could bring to the aid of every cause worthy of his championship the force and power of his master mind.

Probably no man in the state could so illy be spared as could Governor Jonnson. He reflected credit upon himself and upon his great work as chief magistrate, and he brought glory to his state and to his people. His name has been indelibly impressed upon the history of his time. He was a native son, and one of the best of Minneasota's productions, and his life and death is an inspiration to the manhood and womanhood of the state.

[Special correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, Minn., September, 21.—Governor Johnson's death has brought home to all of us, and I think more particularly those who make it their business to gauge and measure public sentiment how close the Governor was to the great heart of the people, and how warm was the place he held in their affections. It is not the loss of a faithful and efficient public servant that has brought sadness into every household in Minnesota. It is as though a dear friend lay cold in the embrace of death. Thinking of that we forget the great party leader, the accomplished man of the world with his fine talents and brilliant prospects so suddenly eclipsed, and think only of him as one near and dear to us all.

A Successful Life

But Time stops for no man, nor takes not of such common-place incidents as the issues of life and death. The work of the great world still goes on, and in it each must do his little share, only pausing for a moment to think of his anxieties, his griefs and his losses. So it will be to the end, when the beat that can be hoped is that we too may hear the glad welcome of "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." To such, whatever measure of success he has met with his life has been triumphant and his death glorious. For him life has been well worth the living. That life only is a failure in which one has not exercised his talents or made use of his opportunities to do his full share of the world's work and to contribute to the welfare and happiness of his kind. Measured by that standard how full and ripe Governor Johnson's life has been, how replete with good works an dprompt and efficient performance of the daily tasks set to his hand. Who better than he has succeeded in faithfully and modestly doing his duty in that state of life to which it has pleased God to call him?

The Governor's Boyhood

And how varied those duties have been. What a lesson his life affords of what may be accomplished when one does his duty as it comes to him however simple that duty may be. As with the lad cheerfully carrying in his little wagon, the laundry to his mother's patrons, carefully and conscientiously doing his humble task, so it has been with Governor Johnson all his life long. He always rose to his opportunities. We can imagine the pride with which a little later he stood for the first time behind the counter of the village grocery store; what dreams he had of some day owning such a business of his own, how eager he was to learn, how ready to carry out the instructions of his employer, how solicitous to win his confidence and the favor of customers and to see that their orders were promptly filled or their purchases delivered.

Governor John Albert Johnson.

"So fades a summer cloud away;
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er;
So gently shuts the eye of day;
So dies a wave along the shore."

Developnig Character

Gradually as his mind was opened to things he saw around him, and as he learned better how to measure the relations of the various elements of the community, his views enlarged. He came early to appreciate the value of knowledge. He came to see how limited the scope of the employment he had at first gladly accepted. Ambition was strong within him. How much he owed his next place to chance or how much to design is not known, doubtless there was an element of both in it. The owner of the drug store in the two years he was employed there no doubt came to know well the grocery boy. To see how neatly even if poorly, he was always dressed. How industrious and how careful he was about his work, and when he applied to him for a place in the drug store was glad enough to help along the promising young fellow. At any rate in the drug store is where we next find young John Johnson, and we find him there as always eager to make the most of the opportunities offered.

Poverty no Bar to Success

His life proves that there are no serious disadvantages in narrow circumstances, such as characterized the Johnson household. True, his mother was a poor woman. She had to work and to work hard, and at an employment which some consider menial, to cloth and feed her four children. But if she was a poor woman, she was a good woman, devoted to her children, pious and God-fearing anxious only to train them in habits of sobriety and industry, and to bring them up to be self respecting men and women. It was no disadvantage in the moulding of the character of John A. Johnson that he had early to help in providing for the necessities of the family, that he had to live frugally, and to spend wisely his small wages. He early came to know the value of money. His mother no doubt impressed on the open mind of her boy the value of knowledge, and one can see as much in John's eagerness to learn, the influence of her training, as his innate taste for literary pursuits.

Getting an Education

At all events John was happily in a position while in the drug store and learning the secrets of pharmacy to develop the powers of a singularly impressionable mind. The reading as well as the practice necessary to acquire a knowledge of the properties of drugs was educational in its best and most practical sense, and no doubt helped to develop in him a literary taste. It was while here he began a course of reading, not necessarily systematic I think, although there were friends to make suggestions and direct his thoughts, but omniverous, and on the whole of an elevating character. Then he was always of a sociable disposition, one almost has to be a successful clerk in the country store where the politicians and the gossips are accustomed to gather to retail the news of the day and to argue on questions of state, no bad school the drug store is as I can tell you. It soon came to be seen that young Johnson had views of his own and that he could express them clearly, and not only that but that he rather liked controversy and took a ready part in the exchange of opinions. From round the store discussions to formal debate is no great step, and it is not surprising to learn that with the knowledge of men and things acquired in his immediate environment, coupled with the general reading he had been doing and the particular study necessary to inform himself on special subjects, and considering also that he had the gift of ready speech, a pleasing address, a convincing way of putting things and the happy faculty of being able to bring to ready use what knowledge and information he had acquired, young Johnson soon came to have quite a reputation as an orator, and like other young fellows who have a gift that way delighted in the impression he made and liking well enough the sound of his own voice. So we see him constantly growing and developing and making the best use he knew of his talents.

Social Activities

But there was another side to Johnson's character which must not be lost sight of, for John was no book worm or walking encyclopedia. He had great social gifts and a genius for companionship. Light hearted he was too and merry. Nobody liked a frolic better than he did. Nobody wanted more to see everybody enjoying them selves. And he made the most of these social gifts, giving them full play and putting them at the disposal of the society of the town. Was there a dance to be got up, young Johnson was always on hand to help and to lead if a leader was needed. He helped to prepare for entertainments. He organized lecture courses. He took his full share and did his full part to make the winter evenings merry. He danced with the wall-flowers and gossiped with the chaperons. A wholesome, happy, joyous soul. Johnson brought gaiety and lightheartedness wherever he went in those days, and it soon came to be that no gathering was complete at which he was not present.

Manly Pursuits

Nor was this man John any carpet Knight, happy only when displaying his graces for the delectation of female admirers of whom we need not doubt he had his share. He was a manly young fellow as fond of sport as the next one and as ready to engage in it. When the militia company was organized he was the first to join, and it speaks eloquently of the confidence the boys had in him and their thorough liking for him that in due time he was awarded the coveted honor of the captaincy of the company. The fact is that even in his hobbleboy days young Johnson showed that he had the making of a man in him and the various activities in which he successfully engaged gave promise of the well balanced character of him as we know him in later days.

Religious Training

I should not forget to mention in this connection something of the boy's religious training. His mother was a devout Lutheran and brought up her children in that faith. But in Western communities we are little in the habit of paying much attention to the peculiar tenets of old world creeds, and any way it is no far cry from the Lutheran to the Presbyterian church to which in time, led no doubt by social influences young Johnson drifted. Here too he gave freely to his talents. He had a fair tenor voice and from being a casual attendant soon joined the choir an dassisted regularly in the services. Later he was made a trustee of the church and became one of the most active members of its governing body.

Further Development

But the time was coming when Johnson was to hear a call to a new field of activity. The local Democratic party was in need of an editor. Johnson had by this time acquired quite a reputation as a debater. Possibly he had been an occasional contributor to the local paper. At all events he was a bright fellow who had hitherto always proved equal to his oportunities. The local solons had confidence in him. They financed the newspaper enterprise and seated Johnson in the editorial chair. He went at his work man fashion. He proved to have faculty for it. He had a great nose for news. He knew everybody. Everybody liked him. Under his management the paper soon came to be regarded as the newsiest from the local standpoint in the county. He developed a clear and lucid literary style His articles while not weighty were plausible and convincing, to the point, and couched in language from which no one could take offense. He did his work well, thoroughly, conscientiously, exercising his literary talents to their capacity and in time making the St. Peter Herald a power in the county and an element in the strength of his party. In this too he made the most of his opportunities and used faithfully and conscientiously his talents in the public service.

Persistent Usefulness

It is not my purpose here to follow Governor Johnson to the state senate and ultimately to the governor's chair. This is neither the place nor the time to outline the course of his administration or to give the reasons for its success or its phenomenal popularity. I am interested to show that that growth was due to the conscientious use he made of his talents, to the readiness and courage with which he met every duty, to the industry and vigor with which he applied himself to the work that came to his hand. In all his relations in life he has done his duty and his full duty. He has been useful. He has embraced his opportunities and proved equal to them. He has used his talents—not hid them.

BUSINESS MEN HONOR GERMO

Banquet at Paul's Hotel Monday Night Was Well Attended.

A banquet was given by the Commercial Club at Paul's hotel Monday night in honor of Attorney Thomas Germo who left Red Lake Falls Wednesday in company with his family for the new home at Taylor, North Dakota, where Mr. Germo will engage in the banking business and in the practice of law.

A large number of the business and professional men of the city were present for the occasion. Following the excellent banquet Mayor Duffy as toastmaster called upon a number of the guests to say something appropriate to the occasion, and many toasts were given and songs were sung. Evidently it was easy to say fine things about Mr. Germo. The sincere frankness of Mr. Germo's friends in expressing appreciation of his many fine qualities was an indication of the esteem in which he is held by his Red Lake Falls friends. The guests, that they might show their sincerity of purpose in paying compliment to Mr. Germo, desired that they might in every way possible give expression of their appreciation and the suggestion that an expression of appreciation, formal though it may be, be prepared for publication in the Gazette as a permanent record of their desire to do honor to Mr. Germo was enthusiastically received, and the resolution published below was adopted by a rising vote:

"Whereas, our friend and fellow townsman, The Germo, and his family, are about to move to their new home at Taylor, North Dakota, we gather here to bid him farewell and God's speed, and it is our desire by some act to give permanent record of our appreciation of him.

"By his long residence among us as an attorney at law and business associate we have learned to know him as a man of sterling character, sound business ability and one who is unquestionably honest and whose habits are above reproach. Mr. Germo has been county attorney of Red Lake county for two terms (four years) and has made one of the best county attorneys that this county has ever had.

"We realize our great loss by the departure of Mr. Germo and his family from our business and social circles, and we unhesitatingly recommend him to the people of Taylor, North Dakota, and that vicinity, and we are convinced that by his sterling character, business ability, uprightness and honesty he he will endear himself to the people of his new home and its vicinity as he has endeared himself to us. We cheerfully recommend from a business, financial and social standpoint Mr. Germo and his family to the people of Taylor, North Dakota."

TAKEN TO WINNIPEG

Four Aliens Taken Out of the Country and Turned Loose.

Max Felstyner, an inspector of the United States immigration service, was in town Wednesday and upon leaving took with him four aliens who had been the guests of Sheriff Nelson for several week. The men had been held here upon information from Canadian immigration officials. The only charge against the men was that of having left Canada and come into the United States without passing inpection. The men, who are Austrians, were of a party of about forty who were brought over the line by some one who acted as pilot for a consideration and the authorities believe that the man who helped them over the line is more guilty of a violation of the immigration regulations than are the men. The officials would like to find the fellow who did the piloting. The men were taken to Winnipeg by the inspector and will there be given their liberty. Officials of the two countries have been in correspondence since the men were taken into custody and to dispose of the case against the men has caused much trouble and has cost several hundred dollars. The men did not appear to be "undesirable citizens," but they were guilty of a technical violation of the immigration laws and must get out

The manner in which the case were disposed of indicates that the government will insist that its regulations be complied with even though violation of them may cause no injury.

"THIEF RIVER LINE" GOES TO PLUMMER

Car Shops May be Moved from Thief River Falls to Plummer.

Line May be Built Through Red Lake Falls. Later.

It has been given out definitely that the new Soo line, the so-called "Thief River Falls line," is to go to Plummer instead of Thief River Falls. If there was ever any doubt that it was the plan of the company to make Plummer the junction point, that doubt has been dispelled. Within the past few days headquarters for a crew of men have been established at Plummer and the men are working to the east of that village.

It is rumored that when the line is completed the Soo car shops will be moved from Thief River Falls to Plummer. The work can be handled better at the junction point than at Thief River Falls. The fact that the company owns several hundred acres of land at Plummer gives credence to the report that it is planned to move the shops to that place. If the officials believe that the work can be handled better at Plummer than at Thief River Falls, and there is reason for them to believe that, the shops will be moved. That is the way railroads do business.

It is also reported that at some future date the new line will be extended westward and that the line will pass through this city.

KARLSTAD BANK ROBBERS CAPTURED

Detective Traced the Robbers to Watertown, South Dakota.

Three of the men who robbed the Karlstad bank a few weeks ago are under arrest at Watertown, S. D., where they were overtaken by a detective who had been on their trail since the robbery. The men will be brought back to Kittson county for trial.

Neither Miss Katheryn Elkins, her mother nor her brother, who arrived in Paris recently, would make any statement to newspaper men as to their plans. "Convincing evidence" is the verdict of the papers of London on the brief summary of Commander Peary's voyage to the north pole, published this morning. "There is no possibility of doubt with regard to this narrative," comments the Westminster Gazette, which adds: "Peary has actually reached the pole and he seems to have taken the usual precautions of having all his work verified as he advanced."

The exports of the American manufactures for the 120 years, from 1789 to 1909, according to a report just made public by the bureau of statistics of the department of commerce and labor, amounted to $12,000,000,000. Of this enormous amount two-thirds were exported within the last twenty-seven years and one-half within the past eleven years. This shows that the value of manufactures exported within the last eleven years is as great as all that exported in the 109 years peceding 1898 and the total for the last twenty years twice as large as for the total for the 100 yeas preceding.

The president has approved the sentence of dismissal imposed by a general court-martial appointed by him at Denver, Colo., in the case of First Lieutenant Clarence S. Nettles, U. S. A. (retired). Rear Admiral W. S. Cowles, chief of the bureau of equipment of the navy expressed his delight over the Peary announcement. "It was my understanding," said Admiral Cowles, "that when he left here it was his hope to reach the pole about this time. Peary is a most deserving officer. He has pursued his purpose under all sorts of adverse conditions.

"Aptitude" as a characteristic of fitness for a naval career was made the subject of observation during the recent practice cruise of the naval cadets. As a consequence, Captain Bowyer, the head of the Annapolis academy, acting on the reports of his subordinates, has found it necessary to report five midshipmen for separation from the service on account of inaptitude.

"Have won out at last; the pole is ours," was the laconic message that reached the National Geographical society from Commander Robert E. Peary as a report to the society which contributed to the Peary expedition. The message was dated at Indian Harbor, via Cape Ray.

PRESIDENT WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT, backed up by 326 pounds of joyful smiles is to-day speeding westward on a 13,000-mile tour of the United States.

The trip is over two months in duration, starting September 15 from Boston and ending with the president's arrival in Washington for the winter, on November 21.

It is the longest journey through the length and breadth of the United States ever undertaken by an American executive while in office, and the trip is notable in presidential annals.

While ex-President Theodore Roosevelt is smashing precedents and setting new ones in Africa by riding on the cowcatchers of engines, etc., his successor is getting close to the soil in his own environment.

Riding with the engineer, getting his picture taken leaning from the cab of the engine almost in the act of swabbing the grease from the numbers on the side of the vehicle, stretching over the observation platform to shake hands with countrymen at towns where two-minute stops are billed, shouting a cheery "howdy" as the special train pulls out of the small town station, "Big Bill" Taft is racing from coast to coast and back again.

FIVE MINUTES FOR A RECEPTION

He was scheduled to touch the extreme northern boundary of the country and upon the occasion, October 16, when it was prearranged that he should shake hands with President Diaz of Mexico, and thereby cement relations between these national neighbors, he was slated to set foot on the south boundary.

He started from Beverly, Mass., which is on the east coast of the United States and his program called for a visit of several days at Seattle and other points on the Pacific coast which is the west boundary of the union. Thus it was predestined that the executive should set foot on the four extreme lines which enclose the domain which selected him as its head.

The personnel of the president's traveling party besides the president, consists of John Hays Hammond, president of the League of Republican Clubs; Capt. Archibald W. Butt, military aide; Wendell W. Mischler, assistant secretary; Dr. J. J. Richardson of Washington, D. C.; James Sloan, Jr., and L. C. Wheeler of the secret service and Maj. Arthur Brooks, the president's confidential messenger. Six newspaper men accompany the president throughout the entire trip. The party travels in two private cars attached for the greater part of the time to regular trains. Besides the regular executive affairs, President Taft is preparing his message to congress and a small part of each day is spent in either making memoranda or mental notes on points upon which he will elucidate in the regular communication due in December.

Secretary Carpenter, the man who handles much of the president's business of national importance, has packed away in his grips several hundred pounds of programs which are to be carried out at the various points at which the president is scheduled to stop and make a few remarks.

There is scarcely a state in the union through which the president does not pass. Every big city in the country with only a few exceptions, will be invaded in accordance with the presidential program.

Leaving Boston, after motoring into the city of highbrows, Mr. Taft and his two special trains departed westward for Chicago, arriving in the windy city the following day. Party chiefs there received him with the sort of glad hand that Chicago knows how to extend. Taft's palm turned upward in response to the cordial greeting, after which he was down on the bookings to "do" Madison, Portage and Milwaukee, Wis., in a single day, on his way to Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minn.

A DASH TO THE MEETING PLACE

Thence the program called for a southern trip to Des Moines, Iowa, and Omaha, Neb., with a long jump to Denver, Col., which city a little over a year ago wasn't big enough to hold all the Democrats who wanted William Jennings Bryan for the job Mr. Taft now has.

Thence to Wolhurst, Pueblo, Glenwood Springs and Montrose, Col. From there the president was routed to Salt Lake City, Utah, Pocatello, Idaho, Butte and Helena, Mont., Spokane, North Yakima and Seattle, Wash.

The line of travel from Spokane extends southward along the Pacific coast, the southern states being next to receive the president. At El Paso, Texas, one of the most notable events of the tour will occur when on the sixteenth day of October President Diaz of Mexico and President Taft of the United States, will shake hands in a mutual harmony carnival.

Along the northern line of travel "Oh, you Bill Taft!" became a slogan, and "Howdy Bill" was another favorite expression of the multitude during the first days of the tour. That great big 326 pound Taft smile, which is the only one of its kind in captivity, was the greeting which met the salutations from close to the soil.

Secretary of the Interior Ballinger will accompany the president through the Pacific northwest. Secretary of War Dickinson will join the party at El Paso, Texas, and make the remaining trip back to Washington. Secretary Nagel of the department of commerce and labor will be a member of the party on the trip down the Mississippi river. During his stay in certain of the states the president probably will have as guests on his train the senators of those commonwealths. He expected to meet Senator Cummins who has been reported of late as being boomed for the presidency in 1912, at Des Moines. Senator Dolliver also was to be at Des Moines.

San Antonio, Texas will add its welcome to President Diaz at El Paso in the meeting of the president of the Latin republic with President Taft, on October 16, through a committee of 100 citizens and members of the international club. If President Diaz decides to return to Mexico City via San Antonio, a special train will be placed at his disposal and he and his staff will be given possession of the International club's home. A special committee of 25 conveyed this welcome and invitation to President Diaz in Mexico City. President Taft was made honorary president and member for life of the club, as are President Diaz and former President Roosevelt, and a special committee will present engrossed certificates of election to him before his visit.

"HOWDY, BILL!"

CLIMBING INTO THE CAB

PRESIDENT DIAZ OF MEXICO, WHOM TAFT WILL MEET

Arriving at St. Louis from Texas at 7:27 a. m., Monday, October 25, President Taft will be entertained at breakfast at 8:30 o'clock by the Commercial club at the St. Louis hotel. At 11 a. m. he will make an address in the Coliseum, which holds 15,000 people.

At 2 p. m. the president will be the guest of Business Men's League at luncheon, in the Jefferson hotel. He will not speak at this function, but will hurry to East St. Louis (Ill.), to attend the dedication of a government building there at 4 p. m.

The president will return to St. Louis in time to sail for New Orleans on the steamboat Mississippi at 5 p. m. Arriving at Cape Girardeau, Mo., at 6 a. m., October 26, the president will be routed out of bed to make an address from the upper deck of the seamboat to the people gathered on the wharf. Leaving Cape Girardeau at 7 a. m., there will be a five-hour run to Cairo, Ill., where at noon Mr. Taft will make a second address from the boat. Leaving Cairo at 1 o'clock the next stop is scheduled at Hickman, Ky., at 4 p. m., where the third address from the deck of the Mississippi will be made. Leaving Hickman at 5 p. m. an all-night run will bring the party to Memphis, Tenn., at 8 o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, October 27.

At Memphis the president will leave the steamer and be entertained in the city for four hours, making an address while there. Helena, Ark., will be reached at 6 p. m. on the 27th, and an address from the boat is scheduled. On Thursday, October 28, the only stop is scheduled at Vicksburg, where the president's party arrives at 6 p. m.

WOMEN IN DUEL

TWO ARE KILLED IN BLOODY FIGHT WAGED WITH PISTOL AND KNIFE.

FIGHT IS FATAL TO BOTH

Police Arrive At Scene In Apartment House Only To Find Bodies Of Two Who Figure In The Bloody Battle.

Chicago, Sept. 15.—Mrs. Julius Tripp and Mrs. Louis Silvers, of New York, are both dead as the result of a pistol and knife battle between the two women in Mrs. Tripp's apartment in this city.

Mrs. Silvers is a sister-in-law of Mrs. Tripp. It is said her husband left her about three months ago. Mrs. Tripp is the wife of the superintendent of a manufacturing firm. There were ten bullet wounds and one cut on the body of Mrs. Tripp, while Mrs. Silvers suffered from bullet wounds in the chest and several knife slashes. Only one revolver was found in the apartments and eight empty shells and two cartridges were found, showing that the revolver was emptied and reloaded during the struggle. The furnishing of the apartments were in disorder and in every room there were evidences of a desperate struggle waged between the two women.

Mrs. Tripp was fully dressed but Mrs. Silvers was in her night gown. Mrs. Silvers had been staying at the Tripp home for about a month and the two women are said to have had frequent quarrels, principally over the division of household duties.

EXONERATES BALLINGER

President Grants Request For Dismissal Of Tale-Bearer.

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 15.—A statement in which President Taft announces his findings upon the charges against the conduct of the interior department of the government by L. R. Glavis, chief of the field division of the general land office, in connection with the Cunningham coal lands in Alaska, exonerating Secretary Ballinger of the interior department and observing that the Glavis case embraced only "shreds of suspicion," was made public here tonight.

The president grants Ballinger's request for authority to dismiss Glavis from the service of the government "for unjustly impeaching the official integrity of his superior officer," and takes occasion to review the evidence in the so-called "water power trust" and other cases to refute the charges that the secretary of the interior is out of sympathy with the policy of the administration in favor of conservation of natural resources.

The statement is in the form of a letter to Secretary Ballinger, written before President Taft left his summer home at Beverley.

EIGHT ARE KILLED.

Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 15.—Eight trainmen killed and fifteen passengers injured, two perhaps fatally, is the result of a collision between a passenger and freight train this morning on the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis railroad at Pegram Station, about 20 miles west of here.

In the fire that followed at least two of the bodies were consumed and it is feared that others not yet found have been reduced to ashes, undistinguishable from the mass of cinders about them. All the injured passengers are from North Carolina and Tennessee.

TAFT WELL RECEIVED.

Syracuse, N. Y., Sept. 15.—After traversing today the states of Massachusetts and New York, President Taft tonight is skirting the southern shores of Lake Erie on his way to Chicago, where he will arrive at 11:30 a. m. tomorrow to make his first important stop on his 13,000 mile tour of the South and West.

The presidential train passed through here at 7:35 p. m. Wherever the train has stopped on its run from Boston there were large crowds at the railway stations and the president was greeted with enthusiastic cheers.

BANKERS HAVE TALK FEST.

Chicago, Sept. 15.—Two great divisions of banking activity, the trust company and the clearing house, occupied the attention of the delegates to the convention of the American Bankers' Association here today.

STRIKE IS ON AGAIN.

Pittsburg, Sept. 15.—The car workers strike at the plant of the Pressed Steel Car Co., in Schoenville, which was thought settled Wednesday of last week after costing nine lives and heavy financial loss, began anew today when between 3,000 and 4,000 employes of the car works walked from their work and quietly dispersed to their homes.

REPORT OF THE DISCOVERY OF THE NORTH POLE by Robert E. Peary, Commander U. S. N., Copyright, 1909, by the New York Times Company.

Peary Denies Cook Claim.

Battle Harbor, Labrador (via Marconi wireless, Cape Ray, N. F.), Sept. 10.—Do not trouble about Cook's story, or attempt to explain any discrepancies in his statements. The affair will settle itself. He has not been at the pole on April 21, 1908, or at any other time. He has simply handed the public a gold brick.

These statements are made advisedly, and I have proof of them. When he makes a full statement of his journey over his signature to some geographical society, or other reputable body, if that statement contains the claim that he has reached the pole, I shall be in a position to furnish material that may prove distinctly interesting reading for the public. ROBERT E. PEARY.

Battle Harbor, Labrador (via Marconi wireless, Cape Ray, N. F.), Sept. 9.—The steamer Roosevelt, bearing the north polar expedition of the Peary Arctic club, parted company with the Erik and steamed out of Etah ford late in the afternoon of August 18, 1908, setting the usual course for Cape Sabine. The weather was dirty, with fresh southerly winds. We had on board 22 Eskimo men, 17 women, and 10 children, 226 dogs, and some forty odd walrus.

We encountered the ice a short distance from the mouth of the harbor, but it was not closely packed, and was negotiated by the Roosevelt without serious difficulty.

Find Much Water.

As we neared Cape Sabine the weather cleared somewhat and we passed by Three Voort island and Cape Sabine, easily making out with the naked eye the house at Hayes harbor occupied by me in the winter of 1901-02.

From Cape Sabine north there was so much water that we thought of setting the lug sail before the southerly wind, but a little later appearance of ice to the northward stopped this.

There was clean open water to Cape Albert, and from there scattered ice to a point about abreast of Victoria Head, thick weather and dense ice bringing us some ten or fifteen miles away.

From here we drifted south somewhat and then got aslant to the northward out of the current. We worked a little further north and stopped again for some hours. Then we again worked westward and northward till we reached a series of lakes, coming to a stop a few miles south of the Windward's winter quarters at Cape Durville.

From here, after some delay, we slowly worked a way northeastward through fog and broken ice of medium thickness through one night and the forenoon of the next day, only emerging into open water and clear weather off Cape Fraser.

Strike Ice and Fog.

From this point we had a clear run through the middle of Robeson channel uninterrupted by either ice or fog, to Lady Franklin bay. Here we encountered both ice and fog, and while working along in search of a practicable opening were forced across to the Greenland coast at Thank God Harbor.

The fog lifted there and enabled us to make out our whereabouts and we steamed north through a series of leads past Cape Lupton, and thence southward toward Cape Union. A few miles off that cape we were stopped by impracticable ice, and we drifted back south to Cape Union, where we stopped again.

Ship Forced Aground.

We lay for some time in a lake of water and then, to prevent being drifted south again, took refuge under the north shore of Lincoln bay, in nearly the identical place where we had our unpleasant experiences three years before. Here we remained for severeal days during a period of constant and at times violent northeasterly winds.

Twice we were forced aground by the heavy ice; we had our port quarter rail broken and a hole stove in the bulwarks, and twice we pushed out in an attempt to get north, but were forced back each time to our precarious shelter.

Heavy Running Ice.

Finally on September 2 we squeezed around Cape Union and made fast in a shallow niche in the ice, but after some hours we made another short run to Black cape and hung on to a grounded bit of ice. At last, a little after midnight of September 5, we passed through extremely heavy running ice into a stream of open water, rounded Cape Rawson and passed Cape Sheridan.

Within a quarter of an hour of the same time we arrived three years before—seven a. m., September 5—we reached the open water extending beyond Cape Sheridan.

We steamed up to the end of it and it appeared practicable at first to reach Porter bay, near Cape Joseph Henly, which I had for my winter quarters, but the outlook being unsatisfactory, I went back and put the Roosevelt into the only opening in the floe, being barred close to the mouth of the Sheridan river a little north of our position three years prior.

Put Up for Winter.

The season was further advanced than in 1905; there was more snow on the ground and the new ice inside the floe bergs was much thicker.

The work of discharging the ship was commenced at once and rushed to completion. The supplies and equipment we sledged across ice and sea and deposited on shore. A house and workshop were built of board, covered with sails, and fitted with stoves, and the ship was snug for winter in shoal water, where it touched bottom at low tide.

American Explorer's Own Story of His Thrilling and Successful Dash to the Absolute Apex of the Earth.

The settlement on the stormy shores of the Arctic ocean was christened Hubbardville.

Hunting parties were sent out on September 10 and a bear was brought in on the 12th and some deer a day or two later.

Prepare for Sledge Trip.

On September 15 the full work of transferring supplies to Cape Columbia was inaugurated. Marvin with Dr. Goodsall and Borup and the Eskimos, took 16 sledge loads of supplies to Cape Belknap and on the 27th the same party started with loads to Porter bay.

The work of hunting and transporting supplies was prosecuted continuously by the members of the party and the Eskimos until November 5, when the supplies for the spring sledge trip had been removed from winter quarters and deposited at various places from Cape Colan to Cape Columbia.

The latter part of September the movement of the ice subjected the ship to a pressure which listed it to port some eight or ten degrees, and it did not recover till the following spring.

On October 1 I went on a hunt with two Eskimos across the field and Pass bay and the peninsula, made the circuit of Clemants Markham inlet, and returned to the ship in seven days with 15 musk oxen, a bear and a deer.

Later in October I repeated the trip, obtaining five musk oxen, and hunting parties secured some 40 deer.

Supplies Moved to Base.

In the February moon Bartlett went to Cape Hecla, Goodsall moved some more supplies from Hecla to Cape Colan, and Borup went to Markham inlet on a hunting trip. On February 15 Bartlett left the Roosevelt with his division for Cape Columbia and Parr bay.

Goodsall, Borup, MacMillan and Hansen followed on successive days with their provisions. Marvin returned from Cape Bryant on February 17 and left for Cape Columbia on February 21. I brought up the rear on February 22.

The total of all divisions leaving the Roosevelt was seven members of the party, 59 Eskimos, 140 dogs and 23 sledges.

Make Ready for Dash.

By February 27 such of the Cape Colan depot as was needed had been brought up to Cape Columbia, the dogs were rested and double rationed and harnessed, and the sledges and other gear overhauled.

Four months of northerly winds during the fall and winter instead of southerly ones, as during the previous season, led me to expect less open water than before, but a great deal of rough ice, and I was prepared to hew a road through the jagged ice for the first hundred miles or so, then cross the big lead.

Bartlett Leads the Way.

On the last day of February Bartlett, with his pioneer division, accomplished this, and his division got away due north over the ice on March 1. The rest of the party got away on Bartlett's trail, and I followed an hour later.

The party now comprised seven members of the expedition, 17 Eskimos, 133 dogs and 19 sledges. One Eskimo and seven dogs had gone to pieces.

A strong easterly wind, drifting snow, and temperature in the minus marked our departure from the camp at Cape Columbia, which I had christened Crane City. Rough ice in the first march damaged several sledges and smashed two beyond repair, the teams going back to Columbia for other sledges in reserve there.

Pass British Record.

We camped ten miles from Crane City. The easterly wind and low temperature continued. In the second march we passed the British record made by Markham in May, 1876—82.20—and were stopped by open water, which had been formed by wind after Bartlett passed.

In this march we negotiated the lead and reached Bartlett's third camp. Borup had gone back from here, but missed his way, owing to the faulting of the trail by the movement of the ice.

Marvin came back also for more fuel and alcohol. The wind continued, forming open water all about us. At the end of the fourth march we came upon Bartlett, who had been stopped by a wide lake of open water. We remained here from March 4 to March 11.

Gets Glimpse of Sun.

At noon of March 5 the sun, red and shaped like a football by excessed refection, just raised itself above the horizon for a few minutes and then disappeared again. It was the first time I had seen it since October 1.

I now began to feel a good deal of anxiety because there were no signs of Marvin and Borup, who should have been there for two days. Besides, they had the alcohol and oil, which were indispensable for us.

We concluded that they had either lost the trail or were imprisoned on an island by open water, probably the latter.

Fortunately, on March 11 the lead was practicable and, leaving a note for Marvin and Borup to push on after us by forced marches, we proceeded northward. The sounding of the lead gave 110 fathoms.

During this march we crossed the eighty-fourth parallel and traversed a succession of just frozen leads, from a few hundred yards to a mile in width. This march was really simple.

On the fourteenth we got free of the leads and came on decent going. While we were making camp a courier from Marvin came and informed me he was on the march in the rear. The temperature was 59 below zero.

The following morning, March 15, I sent Hansen with his division north to pioneer a trail for five marches, and Dr. Goodsell, according to the program, started back to Cape Columbia.

MacMillan Turns Back.

At night Marvin and Borup came spinning in with their men and dogs steaming in the bitter air like a squadron of battleships. Their arrival relieved me of all anxiety as to our oil supply.

In the morning I discovered that MacMillan's foot was badly frost bitten. The mishap had occurred two or three days before, but MacMillan had said nothing about it in the hope that it would come out all right.

A glance at the injury showed me that the only thing was to send him back to Cape Columbia at once. The arrival of Marvin and Borup enabled me to spare sufficient men and dogs to go back with him.

On leaving the camp the expedition comprised 16 men, 12 sledges and 100 dogs. The next march was satisfactory as regards distance and the character of the going. In the latter part there were pronounced movements in the ice, both visible and audible.

Some leads were crossed, in one of which Borup and his team took a bath, and we were finally stopped by an impracticable lead opening in front of us. We camped in a temperature of 50 degrees below.

At the end of two short marches we came upon Hansen and his party in camp, mending their sledges. We devoted the remainder of the day to overhauling and mending sledges and breaking up our damaged ones for material.

Make Forced Marches.

The next morning I put Marvin in the lead to pioneer the trail, with instructions to make two forced marches to bring up our average which had been cut down by the last two short ones. Marvin carried out his instructions implicitly. A considerable amount of young ice assisted in this.

At the end of the tenth march, latitude 85.23, Borup turned back in command of the second supporting party, having traveled a distance equivalent to Nansen's distance from this far to his farthest north.

I was sorry to lose this young Yale runner, with his enthusiasm and pluck. He had led his heavy sledge over the floes in a way that commanded everyone's admiration and would have made his father's eyes glisten.

Changes His Plan.

From this point the expedition comprised 20 men, 10 sledges, and 70 dogs. It was necessary for Marvin to take a sledge from here, and I put Bartlett and his division in advance to pioneer the trail.

The continual daylight enabled me to make a moderation here that brought my advance and main parties closer together and reduced the likelihood of their being separated by open leads.

After Bartlett left camp with Henderson and their division, Marvin and I remained with our division 20 hours longer and then followed. When we reached Bartlett's camp he broke out and went on and we turned in. By this arrangement the advance party was traveling while the main party was asleep, and vice versa, and I was in touch with my advance party every 24 hours.

Moves Expeditiously.

I had no reason to complain of the going for the next two marches, though for a less experienced party, less adaptable sledges, or less perfect equipment it would have been an impossibility.

At our position at the end of the second march, Marvin obtained a satisfactory sight for latitude in clear weather, which placed us at 85.48. The result agreed satisfactorily with the dead reckoning of Marvin, Bartlett and myself.

Up to this time, the slight altitude of the sun had made it not worth while to waste time in observations.

On the next two marches the going improved, and we covered good distances. In one of these marches a lead delayed us a few hours. We finally ferried across the ice cakes.

Makes Record Run.

The next day Bartlett let himself out, evidently, for a record, and reeled off 20 miles. Here Marvin obtained another satisfactory sight on latitude, which gave the position as 86.38 (or beyond the farthest north of Nansen and Abruzzi), and showed that we had covered 50 minutes of latitude in three marches.

In these three marches we had passed the Norwegian record of 86.14, by Nansen, and the Italian record of 86.34, by Cagni.

From this point Marvin turned back in command of the third supporting party. My last words to him were: "Be careful of the leads, my boy."

The party from this point comprised nine men, seven sledges, and 60 dogs. The conditions at this camp and the apparently unbroken expanse of fairly level ice in every direction reminded me of Cagni's description of his farthest north.

Danger Is Encountered.

But I was not deceived by the apparently favorable outlook, for available conditions never continue for any distance or any length of time in the arctic regions.

The next march was over good going, but for the first time since leaving land we experienced that condition, frequent over these ice fields, of a hazy atmosphere, in which the light is equal everywhere. All relief is destroyed, and it is impossible to see for any distance.

We were obliged in this march to make a detour around an open lead. In the next march we encountered the heaviest and deepest snow of the journey, through a thick, smothering mantle lying in the depressions of heavy rubble ice.

Temporarily Discouraged.

I came upon Bartlett and his party, fagged out and temporarily discouraged by the heartracking work of making road.

I knew what was the matter with them. They were simply spoiled by the good going on the previous marches. I rallied them a bit, lightened their sledges and sent them on encouraged again.

During the next march we traveled through a thick haze drifting over the ice before a biting air from the northeast. At the end of the march we came upon the captain camped beside a wide open lead with a dense black water sky northwest, north and northeast.

The next march was also a long one. It was Bartlett's last hit. He let himself out over a series of large old floes, steadily increasing in diameter and covered with hard snow.

Wind Helps Out.

During the last few miles I walked beside him or in advance. He was solemn and anxious to go further, but the program was for him to go back from here in command of the fourth supporting party, and there were no supplies for an increase in the main party.

Bartlett Did Good Work.

When he left I felt, for a moment, pangs of regret as he disappeared in the distance, but it was only momentary. My work was still ahead, not in the rear.

Bartlett had done good work and had been a great help to me. Circumstances had thrust the brunt of the pioneering upon him instead of dividing it among several, as I had planned.

He had reason to take pride in the fact that he had bettered the Italian record by a degree and a quarter and had covered a distance equal to the entire distance of the Italian expedition from Franz Josef's land to Cagni's farthest north.

I had given Bartlett this position and post of honor in command of my fourth and last supporting party, and for two reasons: first, because of his magnificent handling of the Roosevelt; second, because he had cheerfully stood between me and many trifling annoyances on the expeditions.

Then there was a third reason. It seemed to me appropriate in view of the magnificent British record of arctic work, covering three centuries, that it should be a British subject who could boast that, next to an American, he had been nearest the pole.

Ready for Final Effort.

With the disappearance of Bartlett I turned to the problem before me. This was that for which I had worked for 32 years, for which I had lived the simple life; for which I had conserved all my energy on the upward trip; for which I had trained myself as for a race, crushing down every worry about success.

In spite of my years, I felt in trim—fit for the demands of the coming days and eager to be on the trail.

As for my party, my equipment, and my supplies, I was in shape beyond my most sanguine dreams of earliest years.

My party might be regarded as an ideal, which had now come to realization—as loyal and responsive to my will as the fingers of my right hand.

Men All Tried and True.

Four of them possess the technique of dogs, sledges, ice, and cold as their heritage. Two of them, Hansen and Ootam, were my companions to the farthest point three years before. Two others, Eginwuk and Sigloo, were in Clark's division, which had such a narrow escape at that time, and now were willing to go anywhere with my immediate party, and willing to risk themselves again in any supporting party.

The fifth was a young man who had never served before in any expedition, but who was, if possible, even more willing and eager than the others for the princely gifts—a boat, a rifle, a shotgun, ammunition, knives, etc., which I had promised to each of them who reached the pole with me; for he knew that these riches would enable him to wrest from a stubborn father the girl whose image filled his hot young heart.

All Followed Him Blindly.

All had blind confidence so long as I was with them, and gave no thought for the morrow, sure that whatever happened I should somehow get them back to land. But I dealt with the party equally. I recognized that all its impetus centered in me, and that whatever pace I set it would make good. If any one played out, I would stop for a short time.

I had no fault to find with the conditions. My dogs were the best, the pick of 122 with which we left Columbia. Almost all were powerful males, hard as nails, in good flesh, but without a superfluous ounce, and, what was better yet, they were all in good spirits.

My sledges, now that the repairs were completed, were in good condition. My supplies were ample for 40 days, and, with the reserve represented by the dogs themselves, could be made to last 50.

At a little after midnight of April 1, after a few hours of sound sleep, I hit the trail, leaving the others to break up camp and follow.

As I climbed the pressure ridge back of our igloos I set another hole in my belt, the third since I started. Every man and dog of us was lean and flat bellied as a board and as hard.

Fine Morning for Start.

It was a fine morning. The wind of the last two days had subsided, and the going was the best and most equable of any I had had yet. The floes were large and old, and clear, and were surrounded by pressure ridges, some of which were almost stupendous.

The biggest of them, however, were easily negotiated, either through some crevice or up some huge brink. I set a good pace for about ten hours. Twenty-five miles took me well beyond the eighty-eighth parallel.

While I was building my igloos a long lead forward by the east and southwest of us at a distance of a few miles.

Few Handicaps Are Faced.

A few hours' sleep and we were on the trail again. As the going was now practically horizontal, we were unhampered and could travel as long as we pleased and sleep as little as we wished.

The weather was fine and the going like that of the previous day, except at the beginning, when pickaxes were required. This and a brief stop at another lead cut down our distance. But we had made 20 miles in ten hours and were half way to the eighty-ninth parallel.

Going Improves on Way.

Again there was a few hours' sleep and we hit the trail before midnight. The weather and going were even better. The surface, except as interrupted by infrequent ridges, was as level as the glacial fringe from Hecla to Columbia, and harder.

We marched something over ten hours, the dogs being often on the trot, and made 20 miles. Near the end of the march we rushed across a lead 100 yards wide, which buckled under our sledges and finally broke as the last sledge left it.

We stopped in sight of the eighty-ninth parallel, in a temperature of 40 degrees below. Again a scant sleep and we were on our way once more and across the eighty-ninth parallel.

This march duplicated the previous one as to weather and going. The last few hours it was on young ice and occasionally the dogs were galloping.

We made twenty-five miles or more, the air, the sky, and the bitter wind burning the face till it cracked. It was like the great interior ice cap of Greenland. Even the natives complained of the bitter air. It was as keen as frozen steel.

A little longer sleep than the previous one had to be taken here, as we were all in need of it. Then on again.

Up to this time, with each successive march, our fear of an impassable lead had increased. At every inequality of the ice I found myself hurrying breathlessly forward, fearing that it marked a lead, and when I arrived at the summit would catch my breath with relief—only to find myself hurrying on in the same way at the next one.

But on this march, by some strange shift of feeling, this fear fell from me completely. The weather was thick, but it gave me no uneasiness.

Before I turned in I took an observation which indicated our position as 89 degrees 25 minutes.

A rise in temperature to 15 degrees below reduced the friction of the sledges and gave the dogs the appearance of having caught the spirits of the party. The more sprightly ones, as they went along with tightly curled tails, frequently tossed their heads, with short, sharp barks and yelps.

In 12 hours we had made 40 miles. There was no sign of a lead in the march.

Pole Reached at Last.

I had now made my five marches, and was in time for a hasty noon observation through a temporary break in the clouds, which indicated our position as 89.57. I quote an entry from my journal some hours later:

The pole at last. The prize of three centuries, my dream and goal for 20 years, mine at last. I cannot bring myself to realize it.

It all seems so simple and commonplace. As Bartlett said when turning back, when speaking of his being in these exclusive regions, which no mortal has ever penetrated before: "It is just like every day."

Of course I had my sensations that made sleep impossible for hours, despite my utter fatigue—the sensations of a lifetime; but I have no room for them here.

The first 30 hours at the pole were spent in taking observations; in going some ten miles beyond our camp and some eight miles to the right of it; in taking photographs, planting my flags, depositing my records, studying the horizon with my telescope for possible land, and searching for a practicable place to make a sounding.

Ten hours after our arrival the clouds cleared before a light breeze from our left and from that time until our departure in the afternoon of April 7 the weather was cloudless and flawless.

The minimum temperature during the 30 hours was 33 below, the maximum 12.

We had reached the goal, but the return was still before us. It was essential that we reach the land before the next spring tide, and we must strain every nerve to do this.

I had a brief talk with my men. From now on it was to be a big travel, little sleep and a hustle every minute.

We would try, I told them, to double march on the return—that is, to start and cover one of our northward marches, make tea and eat our luncheon in the igloos, then cover another march, eat and sleep a few hours, and repeat this daily.

Double Speed on Return.

As a matter of fact, we nearly did this, covering regularly on our return journey five outward marches in three return marches.

Just as long as we could hold the trail we could double our speed, and we need waste no time in building new igloos every day, so that the time we gained on the return lessened the chances of a gale destroying the track.

Just above the eighty-seventh parallel was a region some fifty miles wide which caused me considerable uneasiness. Twelve hours of strong easterly, westerly, or northerly wind would make this region an open sea.

In the afternoon of the 7th we started on our return, having double fed the dogs, repaired the sledges for the last time, and discarded all our spare clothing to lighten the loads.

Sea 1,500 Fathoms Deep.

Five miles from the pole a narrow crack filled with recent ice, through which we were able to work a hole with a pickax, enabled me to make a sounding. All my wire, 1,500 fathoms, was sent down, but there was no bottom.

In pulling up the wire parted a few fathoms from the surface and lead and wire went to the bottom. Off went reel and handle, lightening the sledges still further. We had no more use for them now.

Three marches brought us back to the igloos where the captain turned back. The last march was in the wild sweep of a northerly gale, with drifting snow and the ice rocking under as we dashed over it.

Little Trouble in Leads.

South of where Marvin had turned back we came to where his party had built several igloos while delayed by open leads. Still further south we found where the captain had been held up by an open lead and obliged to camp.

Fortunately the movement of these leads was simply open and shut, and it took considerable water motion to fault the trail seriously.

While the captain, Marvin, and as I found later, Borup, had been delayed by open leads, we seemed to bear a charm and with no single lead were we delayed more than a couple of hours. Sometimes the ice was fast and firm enough to carry us across; sometimes a short detour, sometimes a brief halt for the lead to close, sometimes an improvised ferry on an ice cake, kept the trail without difficulty down to the tenth outward march.

First Handicap on Return.

Igloos there disappeared completely and the entire region was unrecognizable. Where on the outward journey had been narrow cracks there were now broad leads, one of them over five miles in width, caught over with young ice.

Here again fortune favored us, and no pronounced movement of the ice having taken place since the captain passed, we had his trail to follow. We picked up the old trail again north of the seventh igloos, followed it beyond the fifth, and at the big lead lost it finally.

Eskimos Wild with Joy.

From here we followed the captain's trail, and on April 23 our sledges passed up the vertical edge of the glacier fringe, a little west of Cape Columbia.

When the last sledge came up I thought my Eskimos had gone crazy. They yelled and called and danced themselves helpless. As Ootah sat down on his sledge he remarked in Eskimo: "The devil is asleep or having trouble with his wife, or we never should have come back so easily."

A few hours later we arrived at Crane City, under the bluffs of Cape Columbia, and, after putting four pounds of pemmican into each of the faithful dogs to keep them quiet we had, at last, our chance to sleep.

Sleep Finally in Safety.

Never shall I forget that sleep at Cape Columbia. It was sleep, sleep, then turn over and sleep again. We slept gloriously, with never a thought of the morrow or having to walk and, too, with no thought that there was to be never a night more of blinding headache.

Cold water to a parched throat is nothing compared with sleep to a numbed, fatigued brain and body.

Two days we spent here in sleeping and drying our clothes. Then for the ship. Our dogs, like ourselves, had not been hungry when we arrived, but simply lifeless with fatigue. They were different animals now, and the better ones among them swept on with tightly curled tails and uplifted heads and their hind legs treading the snow with pistonlike regularity.

Shocked by Marvin's Death.

We reached Hecla in one march and the Roosevelt in another. When we got to the Roosevelt I was staggered by the news of the fatal mishap to Marvin. He had either been less cautious or less fortunate than the rest of us, and his death emphasized the risk to which we all had been subjected, for there was not one of us but had been in the sledge at some time during the journey.

The big lead, cheated of its prey three years before, had at last gained its human victim.

The rest can be told quickly. McMillan and Borup had started for the Greenland coast to deposit caches for me. Before I arrived a flying Eskimo courier from me overtook them with instructions that the caches were no longer needed and they were to concentrate their energies on the ideal observations, etc., at Cape Morris K. Jesup and north from there.

Return on Roosevelt Begins.

These instructions were carried out and after their return in the latter part of May McMillan made some further tidal observations at other points. The supplies remaining at the various caches were brought in and on July 18 the Roosevelt left its winter quarters and was driven out into the channel back of Cape Nion.

It fought its way south in the center of the channel and passed Cape Sabine on August 8, or 39 days earlier than in 1906, and 32 days earlier than the British expedition in 1876.

We picked up Whitney and his party and stores at Etah. We killed seventy-odd walrus for my Eskimos, whom I landed at their homes. We met the Jeanie off Saunders island and took over its coal and cleared from Cape York on August 26, one month earlier than in 1906.

Praise for His Aids.

As to the personnel, I have again been particularly fortunate. Capt. Bartlett is just Bartlett—tireless, sleepless, enthusiastic, whether on the bridge or in the crow's nest or at the head of a sledge division in the field.

Dr. Goodsell, the surgeon of the expedition, not only looked after its health and his own specialty of microscopes but took his full share of the field work of the expedition as well, and was always ready for any work.

Profs. Marvin and McMillan have secured a muss of scientific data, having made all the tidal and most of the field work, and their services were invaluable in every way.

Borup Valuable in Many Ways.

Borup not only made the record as to the distance traveled during the journey, but to his assistance and his expert knowledge of photography is due what I believe to be the unequaled series of photographs taken by the expedition.

Chief Engineer Wardwell, also of the last expedition, aided by his assistant, Scott, kept the machinery up to a high state of efficiency and has given the Roosevelt the force and power which enabled it to negotiate apparently impracticable ice.

Mr. Gushue, the mate, who was in charge of the Roosevelt during the absence of Capt. Bartlett and myself, and Boatswain Murphy, who was put in charge of the station at Etah for the relief of Cook, were both trustworthy and reliable men, and I count myself fortunate in having had them in my service.

Members of Crew Lauded.

The members of the crew and the firemen were a distinct improvement over those of our last expedition. Every one of them was willing and anxious to be of service in every possible way.

Connors, who was promoted to be bos'n in the absence of Murphy, proved to be practically effective.

Barnes, seaman, and Wiseman and Joyce, firemen, not only assisted Marvin and McMillan in their tidal and meteorological observations on the Roosevelt, but Wiseman and Barnes went into the field with them on their trips to Cape Columbia, and Condon and Cody covered 1,000 miles hunting and sledging supplies.

As for my faithful Eskimos, I have left them with ample supplies of dark, rich walrus meat and blubber for their winter, with currants, sugar, biscuits, guns, rifles, ammunition, knives, hatchets, traps, etc.

For the splendid four who stood beside me at the pole a boat and tent each, to requite them for their energy and the hardship and toil they underwent to help their friend Peary to the north pole.

But all of this—the dearly bought years of experience, the magnificent strength of the Roosevelt, the splendid energy and enthusiasm of my party, the loyal faithfulness of my Eskimos—could have gone for naught but for the faithful necessaries of war furnished so loyally by the members and friends of the Peary Arctic club.

Thanks to Dead Friend.

And it is no detraction from the living to say that to no single individual has the fine result been more signally due than to my friend, the late Morris K. Jesup, the first president of the club. Their assistance has enabled me to tell the last of the great earth stories, the story the world has been waiting to hear for 300 years—the story of the discovery of the north pole.

This affidavit was filed in court of common pleas in Dublin in 1822: "And this deponent further saith, that on arriving at the home of the said defendant for the purpose of personally serving him with the said writ, he, the said deponent, knocked three several times at the outer, commonly called the hall door, but could not obtain admittance, whereupon this deponent was proceeding to knock a fourth time, when a man, to this deponent unknown, holding in his hands a musket or blunderbuss, loaded with balls or slugs, as this deponent has since heard and verily believes, appeared at one of the upper windows of the said house, and presenting the said musket or blunderbuss at this deponent threatened that if said deponent did not instantly retire, he would send his (the deponent's) soul to hell, which this deponent verily believes he would have done, had not this deponent precipitately escaped."

WHAT IS PAINT?

The paint on a house is the extreme outside of the house. The wood is simply a structural under layer. That is as it should be. Unprotected wood will not well withstand weather. But paint made of pure white lead and linseed oil is an invulnerable armor against sun and rain, heat and cold. Such paint protects and preserves, fortifying the perishable wood with a complete metallic casing.

And the outside of the house is the looks of the house. A well-constructed building may be greatly depreciated by lack of painting or by poor painting.

National Lead Company have made it possible for every building owner to be absolutely sure of pure white lead paint before applying. They do this by putting upon every package of their white lead their Dutch Boy Painter trademark. That trademark is a complete guarantee.

Why We Are Stronger.

The old Greeks and Romans were great admirers of health and strength; their pictures and statuary made the muscles of the men stand out like cords.

As a matter of fact we have athletes and strong men—men fed on fine strength making food such as Quaker Oats—that would win in any contest with the old Roman or Greek champions.

It's a matter of food. The finest food for making strength of bone, muscle and nerve is fine oatmeal. Quaker Oats is the best because it is pure, no husks or stems or black specks. Farmers' wives are finding that by feeding the farm hands plentifully on Quaker Oats they get the best results in work and economy. If you are convenient to the store, buy the regular size packages; if not near the store buy the large size family package. 2

Mottoes of a Queen.

Her majesty, the queen of Portugal, pins her faith, it is said, to the following mottoes:

Keep out of doors all you can. Breathe outdoor air, live in it, revel in it. Don't shut yourself up. Build your houses so that the air supply is good. Throw away your portieres and bric-a-brac. Don't have useless trifles about you.

Have a favorite form of exercise and make the most of it. Ride on horseback if you can; cycle if you cannot get a horse; do anything to get out in the open air.

Don't overeat. Drink little and let that little be pure. Don't try to dress too much, yet dress as well as you are able. Wear everything you can to make yourself lovely.

By Automobile Up Mount Rainier.

United States Engineer Eugene Ricksecker celebrated Independence day by throwing open the government road in the Mount Rainier National park. Vehicles and horsemen now have an excellent thoroughfare from tidewater to Narada falls, near snow line in Paradise valley. Mr. Ricksecker says that autos and wagons can now make the trip with comfort. The maximum grade on the road is four per cent. Nearly a score of automobiles, all loaded, went to the mountain.

"Why, mother," he said, "I'd rather be most any other kind of animal you could mention than a girl."

The Winona Independent wants more cold facts and less hot air about this north pole controversy.

The only newspaper supporter of the late lamented Jacobson for renomination for governor next year, the Fairmont Independent, has hauled down his name from the masthead, and insists that because Jake championed Taft and Tawney he is no longer worthy to be considered a party leader.

Nearly two-thirds of the chief expenditures of the United States the past fiscal year were for war, for the army, the navy and pensions. The three cost this government $440,000,000, including $161,000,000 for pensions, $164,000,000 for the war department and $115,000,000 for the navy. It's the cost of peace, not war's cost.

The Jewish World in a discussion of Jewish characteristics claims that in the earliest times the month, the period of the moon cycle, was called a year. Thus Methuselah's 969 reputed years are whittled to 78¾, and Adams 930 years of life to 75½. Then came, it is said, the five-month year, and then followed the six-month year preceding the twelve-month Egyptian year. These various rekonings brings the lifetime of the men who, taking the bible literally, lived hundreds of years, near the limit of three score and ten. The more the pages of the bible are understood as they were intended to be, scepticism regarding the truth of its contents will diminish.

An educational journal says that a teacher's bad days are often due to bad nights. Yes, and her bad nights are often due to bad days. So, what are you going to do about it? It is a good deal like the case of eggs and chicken feed. It is said that eggs wouldn't cost so much if chicken feed were not so high, and that chicken feed would not be so high if eggs didn't cost so much.

Congressman Tawney in explaining his tariff vote, says: "I voted with my party for the adoption of a republican tariff bill. What else could I do? And I might add that I never put more feeling into a vote than I did the 'aye' when my name was called on the adoption of the new tariff measure." It is freely predicted that at the next election the rest of the First district people will show Jim how to put a few feelings in their own votes.

TAFT AT WINONA

There is no longer any doubt as to the position of President Taft on the tariff question. Following his laudation of Aldrich at Boston, the president made a thorough exposition of the subject in his Winona speech, commending the Aldrich bill and praising Congressman Tawney for his vote in support of it.

The president criticised the Minnesota insurgent republicans for voting against the bill, boldly asserting that they had abandoned the republican party.

"Was it the duty of the member of Congress who believed that the bill did not accomplish everything that it ought to accomplish, to vote against it?" asked the president.

"I am here to justify those who answer this question in the negative. I am not here to defend those who voted for the Payne bill, but to support them."

This would indicate that there is a wide difference in the opinion of the President Taft and of the Minnesota senators and congressmen to what constitutes "downward revision" and the fulfillment of the pledges of the republican platform.

According to the president we must be contented with the modicum of relief the eastern manufacturers and the champions of privileged wealth are satisfied to give us. The producer and the consumer apparently are not to be considered in the re-arrangement of tariff schedules.

THE ALDRICH TARIFF

Says the Dry Goods Guide:

"After Senator Aldrich has departed to that bourne where tariffs are not needed, the nation may keep his memory green by some such epitaph as this parapnrase, by the way, of a loving tribute to another man who also failed to grasp his opportunity:

"Here lies Aldrich.
He done his damndest,
He also done 90 millions, of his fellow-men.

"Here are some consolations of the n. tariff: Laces are to cost more—but then the Go-through lace machine will come in free for the benefit of Messrs Aldrich, Goff and a few other Rhode Island favorites.

"Foreign velvets are barred out—but Bwano Tumbo will be able to get his zoological specimens in without cost.

"Hosiery has been boosted so that the poor may have to go barefooted—but joss sticks may still be entered free.

"Though when you buy cotton cloth you are forced to pay extra tribute to the greedy Rhode Island gang, remember that by the grace of Aldrich and his friends, you may import your ashes free.

"While you may not be able to pay the new high tariff prices for linoleum, you have the satisfaction of knowing that natural teeth will come in without cost.

"Silk goods have been so tangled up by the schedule-jugglers of the tariff that no man knows how much more they will cost—but there is no doubt that pig iron is to be cheaper.

"You had a narrow escape in the matter of gloves—but your friend the undertaker, will have to pay more for his'n when he comes around.

"Woolen cloth is taxed up to 250 per cent—but if you can't buy a new gown for your wife or new panties for your children, rest content because J. Pierpont Morgan can now bring in his works of art without annoyance from rude customs men.

"Lemons are up 1⅓ cents—but then the whole bill is a lemon anyway."

TAFT PRAISES ALDRICH.

In his speech at Boston last week President Taft took occasion to pay tribute to his friend Nelson W. Aldrich by referring to "the senator's earnest desire to aid the people and to crown his public career in the preparation and passage of a bill which shall give us a sound and safe monetary and banking system."

President Taft always likes to speak good rather than ill. He doesn't know how to use the big stick, and often his praise is fulsome and flattering rather than deserved.

When the president signed the Aldrich bill he referred to it as an honest attempt at downward revision," when he and everyone else knew that it was not only not "an honest attempt" but it was an upward instead of a downward revision.

It will be hard to convince the people that Senator Aldrich has an overwhelming desire to aid the people. For thirty years he has been the personal representative of the trusts and privileged wealth. He never had a heart?-beat in sympathy with the laboring man or the farmer, and his entire public career has been prostituted to the beck and call of Wall Street.

If one is inclined to be spektical of President Taft's good faith in desiring to perpetuate the Roosevelt policies, this recent laudation of the chief alversary of the big sticq doctrine will furnish plenty of fuel to the flame of doubt and despair.

THE professional politicians in the republican party seem to have narrowed the list of gubernatorial timber to Bill Lee, John Furlong and Rip Brower. Either would suit the politicians, but the people are looking for and confidently expect a better grade of lumber.

MEEKER County must be one of the wealthiest farming communities in the state. The three banks of Litchfield have $1,162,553.69 on time deposit and over a quarter of a million on checking acocunt. This is a lot of money for a country town.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Paynesville Press: "Don't slap Taft" says Congressman Tawney and his friends. Well didn't Tawney administer the first slap when he charged that the big man had conspired with several Minnesota congressmen to betray their constituents "if their votes were needed.".

Sauk Center Herald: "Tongue with brown sauce!" schouts a receipt book. Say, tongue with brown sauce was known long before the flood. Noah had the taste the morning after he checked off the animals, and he had the nerve to tell his folks he didn't know where he got it.

Albert Lea Tribune: The various political machines were set to work to defeat the renomination of Francis J. Heney at the first primary election in San Francisco but the Democrats have made him their candidate, and the decent people of the city at the Golden Gate will be wise if they reelect this mighty foe of the grafters even if the third greatest man in the United States, the Hon. James A. Tawney of the First congressional district of Minnesota has cast some reflections upon the brave fighter of graft and chicanery.

Aitkin Age: The Wadena Pioneer playfully tells us that the grand international conclave of tightwads has been deliberating over the towns of Wadsworth, Ohio; Waddington, Mass.; Wadley, Mo., and Wadena, Minn., to decide where their first meeting shall be held. All joking aside, almost any country town could get up a pretty good sized conclave of tightwads without going outside its own borders.

Hutchinson Leader: We have yet to find a single Minnesota paper, Republican or Democrat, that commends the new tariff bill or Taft for signing it.

Litchfield Independent: Governor Johnson in his speech at Seattle recently sounded a popular kevnote when he advised the west to throw off the domination of the East in legislative, financial, transportation and manufacturing matters. Too long have we been milked by the East, through control by that section of congressional majorities, as well as the incumbents of the presidential chair. It is time for the West to stand up and assert its share of influence in national affairs. All that is needed is united action. The West has the population and the wealth, but so far has been dominated by Eastern shrewdness and cunning.

The reason a wamon knows her son wil lturn out to be a fine man is he shows no signs of it.

S.S.S. FOR BAD BLOOD

The most important part of the human system is the blood. Every muscle, nerve, tissue, bone and sinew is dependent on this vital fluid for nourishment and strength necessary to maintain them in health and enable each to perform the different duties nature requires. Even the heart, the very "engine" of life, receives its vigor and motive power from the blood. Since so much is dependent on this vital fluid it can very readily be seen how necessary it is to have it pure and uncontaminated if we would enjoy the blessing of good health. Bad blood is responsible for most of the ailments of mankind; when from any cause it becomes infected with impurities, humors or poisons, disease in some form is sure to follow. Muddy, sallow complexions, eruptions, pimples, etc., show that the blood is infected with unhealthy humors which have changed it from a pure, fresh stream to a sour, acrid fluid, which forces out its impurities through the pores and glands of the skin. A very common evidence of bad blood is sores or ulcers, which break out on the flesh, often from a very insignificant bruise or even scatch or abrasion. If the blood was pure and healthy the place would heal at once, but being loaded with impurities, which are discharged into the wound, irritation and inflammation are set up and the sore continues. Bad blood is also responsible for Anaemia, Boils, Malaria, etc.; the weak, polluted circulation cannot furnish the nourishment and strength required to sustain the body, and a general run-down condition of health results. S. S. S. is nature's blood purifier and tonic; made entirely of healing, cleansing roots and herbs. It goes down into the circulation and removes every particle of impurity, humor or poison that may be there, restores lost vitality, and steadily tones up the entire system. It adds to the blood the healthful properties it is in need of, and in every way assists in the cure of disease. S. S. S. neutralizes any excess of acid in the blood, making it fresh and pure, and permanently cures Eczema, Acne, Tetter, and all other skin diseases and eruptions. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Malaria, and all other diseases or disorders arising from bad blood. Book on the blood and any medical advice desired free to all who write.

Your S. S. S., in my opinion, is as good a medicine as can be had; it simply cannot be improved upon as a remedy to purify and enrich the blood and to invigorate and tone up the system. This spring my blood was bad and I was run down in health, and having seen your medicine highly advertised I commenced its use. Today my blood is in fine condition and my general health is of the best. Am filling position as fireman for a large concern here, and if I was not in good physical condition it would be impossible for me to fill the place. Your S. S. S. has been of great service to me and I do not hesitate to give it the credit it deserves.

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential.

Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the Local.

Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.

The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments.

The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, eases nervous excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

INTERESTING LETTER FROM PETE BEAULIEU

Tells of Many Attractions In Yakima Valley, Wash.

Wears, Armor and Breathes Through Sieve When Viewing Beautiful Valley

The Gazette has been permitted to publish the following interesting letter received by Helmuth Zaiser from Pete Beaulieu:

North Yakima, Wash., Sept. 11. 1909. Dear Helmuth: Being you're an old booster of the city of Red Lake Falls, also of Red Lake county, and superintendent of all mills and factories of the city which enables you to know and become personally acquainted with most all of the people of the county, farmers, laborers, merchants, lawyers and school ma'ams, you undoubtedly would have more influence than anybody I know of, and that is why I am writing to you.

I am going to try to give you an idea of what Yakima Valley is and looks like to me for the benefit of the remaining residents of the city and surrounding country. Well, to begin with the soil takes my eye. After a farmer has made a little money in Minnesota or other white man's state and don't know he has a good thing and sells out and comes to Yakima, he pays all the way from $200 to $2,000 an acre for a farm. Anything from an acre up is a ranch. Then if he wasn't fortunate enough to have the price of cultivated lands, that is to buy an orchard or hop ranch, he bought four or five acres of desert land. He builds a shack or something to live in and goes to farming. He begins by hauling the stones off the land. This keeps him busy for six months to the acre. There are enough stones on any one acre to build a court house for any county. Then if he wants to raise fruit he has to buy the trees, plant them and irrigate them (that's making water you pay $40 an acre for flow up hill) for two years before he gets the first crop. They never have a crop failure here like they do in Minnesota—unless they have a late frost like they had last spring. No peaches in the valley and apple crop is poor. You get two for five at the fruit stands.

The climate is the main attraction. It never gets over 115 above. If you want to go out into the country to look at land, you begin by buying a dust-proof long coat, goggles, and breathing tubes if you want to breathe regularly. When you want to see anything you have to stop to let the dust settle.

The well water is great, for those afflicted with rheumatism or stiff joints. It's luke-warm and has a delicious sulphur flavor. If you want a drink of ice water you have to buy it. Still they make pretty good beer.

Well, there are all kinds of means of making money out here if you have enough dough when you come. There are some No. 1 timber claims to be taken a hundred miles or so from here but there's no means of getting timber to market, so it's worthless—except for forest reserve.

Wages are little better than in the East, but you pay the difference to exist; can't call it living. Am going into the land business and catch suckers from the East.

If our farmers only worked half as hard as they do out here, they'd all be rich and have shares in paper mills and linen factories.

If I wasn't so busy looking for a job, I'd write a whole lot more, but guess you have an idea anyway.

With regards to friends and knockers, I am your friends,

P. R. Beaulieu.

Rev. Fathers Smiers and Massonnat from Crookston drove in automobile to Terribone accompanied by Mr. Kiewel. The party spent the day at Fr. Veilleut's home and in the afternoon all went to Lambert.

Severe Marchildon and wife from North Yakima, Wash., were last Thursday the guests of Michel Quesnelle.

Next Sunday afternoon, if the weather permits it, there will be a garden party at the Rectory house, at Terrebonne, given by some young ladies of the parish. They will serve delicacies while music and songs will entertain the company. A big crowd is expected as it is for the benefit of the priest's house.

CASS COUNTY SALOONS ORDERED TO CLOSE

Cass Lake, Walker and Other Towns Will be Dry.

Selling Liquor to Indians Federal Authorities Say.

Orders have been issued from the Leech Lake Indian agency that twenty-three saloons in Cass county must close within thirty days. The towns that will be "dry" are Cass Lake, Walker, Backus, Bena and Longville.

It is said that government inspectors have been at Cass Lake and Walker and reported to the officials that practically all of the saloons in the territory have been selling liquor to the Indians and the order was a result of the investigation. Most of the saloons to be closed are located at Cass Lake and Walker, each of the other towns having only one saloon.

MISTAKES IN TITLES.

"Love's Discourses" Has Nothing to Do With Cupid's Pranks.

It is interesting to collect certain of the instances of mistakes in regard to the titles of books. Thus the old farmer who asked for "Edgworth on Irish Bulls" got no doubt something he did not expect, and the dainty youth who applied for "Love's Discourses" did not really wish a volume of sermons by Christopher Love. If application is made by messenger, mistakes of a different sort may occur. An excitable boy once asked for Bishop Cocks and Hen's "Earnest Communicant;" he meant Bishop Oxenden's. Similarly by Warne's "Moral Cookery" he meant his "Model Cookery." A maid forgot all about the title of the book she had been sent for except that it was "something like tomato soup." She was served with "Red Pottage."

It may have been a fault of pronunciation on the part of the purchaser who asked for "rubber bands" that he received a copy of "Robert Burns," but it was certainly the bookseller who was at sea who referred an applicant for "Vega's Logarithmic Tables" to the "funiture department." In cataloguing booksellers frequently err. Thus Mr. Madan, the Oxford scholar, who wrote a grammar and dictionary of the Swaheli language, had those works catalogued as "Madam Swaheli's Grammar" and in the line beneath, "Do. do. Dictionary." Recently, too, a book of Mr. Lucas', "A Swan and Her Friends," giving an account of Miss Seward, "the swan of Lichfield," was classified as "Annie Swan and Her Friends."—Manchester Guardian.

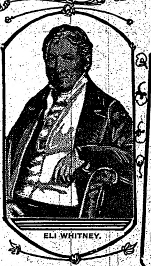
KING COTTON'S IMPOVERISHED RETINUE

BY DANIEL J. SULLY

Editor's Note.—Daniel J. Sully, the author of this article depicting the possibilities of cotton, the pitiful vassalage of the planter and the destiny awaiting the United States and the cotton grower, when we take advantage of our opportunity, has had a remarkable career in the record and romance of cotton. It was his unparalleled market campaign that caused cotton to rise to 17¾ cents a pound in 1903, the highest point reached since the civil war. During this actual reign of cotton, when Sully was its premier, $450,000,000 in gold was brought to this country and formed the substructure of the enormous bull market which culminated in the spring of 1907. Then the south and the whole nation realized for the first time that the success of cotton and the advancement of civilization go hand in hand.

TYPICAL COTTON-PICKING SCENE

SPINNING-ROOM OF A COTTON-MILL



ELI WHITNEY.

THE INVENTOR OF THE COTTON-GIN

COTTON BALES READY FOR SHIPMENT

AMERICAN cotton-planters, proprietors of the greatest gold-producing staple in the world, are poor. They are in practical servitude. It is a tragedy of contemporary life that they who produce for the world the commodity without which modern civilization and industrial life could not proceed are themselves absolutely subservient and the poorest paid toilers in the United States. Intellectually the cotton-growers are surrounded and coerced by factors which have no other purpose than to keep them in this benighted vassalage. From this condition influences of a new American spirit must liberate them.

We smile at the Celestial shivering in the midst of coal-fields larger than the state of Pennsylvania. America's attitude toward cotton is almost equally grotesque. On the southern rim of the United States, within an area of practically 14 states, is grown 80 per cent. of the world's supply of cotton. The remaining 20 per cent., grown in South America, India, and the far east, is of an inferior quality and cannot compete with the cotton grown in the United States. Notwithstanding this enormous advantage, the fact still remains that this heaven-sent boon, paradoxical though it may seem, does not enrich, but rather impoverishes, the southland.

This is a tale of commercial ineptitude. Our greatest asset is our greatest humiliation. Cotton is king, but it is a badly served monarch. Other nations, by farsighted policy, intense activity, and commercial alertness, have overcome the tremendous advantage we have, and by beating down the price of the raw product, and with cheap labor on looms and machinery for the manufacture of the finished product, now control the markets of the world. In the Orient, where we once had our share of trade, the market, to say the least, is slipping from us. It seems almost a travesty on American business methods that English and German manufacturers can go on the docks at Galveston and take our raw cotton, carry it to Europe in subsidized ships, weave it with cheap labor, retransport it to the United States, pay the customs duty, and undersell our home manufacturers. There is something wrong here, isn't there?

Cotton is the clothing of the uncounted multitudes, and even those born to the purple depend upon cotton for much of their appareling. King Cotton's dominion is mankind. America, therefore, producing, practically alone, a commodity vital to civilized life and progress, has in that harvest the secret of incomparable wealth and power. It is not steel or lumber, kerosene or corn, that insures enduring leadership for the United States. Vast capital and dynamic genius have gone into the development of steel, yet this is transitory. The scepter of steel must ultimately slip from our grasp. The iron-ore beds of the Lake Superior region are doomed. Experts have numbered their years as less than a generation. Lumber cannot furnish a permanent foundation for our industrial pre-eminence. The forests are fast vanishing. Oil has contributed one of the leading items to our export trade, and has multiplied incredibly the fortunes of its managers; but the oil-wells cannot disgorge their illuminant forever. Besides the Baku fields are ready to compete. Our corn and wheat before the end of many decades will be consumed at home. Argentina, central Europe and Manchuria produce these cereals in prodigal abundance. Even if our corn and wheat were the world's sole sufficient supply, as in the case of our cotton, the oversea nations could dispense with these staples, as some of them now do. Millions upon millions of Mongolians have not yet developed an appetite for anything save rice. But all of them are clad in cotton goods. An additional inch on the shirts worn by the Mongolians would mean one million bales of cotton, and this is the market that is slipping from us.

Cotton Makes America Supreme Among Nations.

Thus it is cotton, and cotton alone, that can make America permanently unique and supreme among the nations. This fact makes grotesque the record of our unsuccess in selling finished cotton products across the sea. The only foreign customer that counted at all importantly in the totals of our export trade was China, and our market there has pitiably declined. England, Germany, and Japan are forcing our ships from the Pacific, just as they crowded them off the paths of the Atlantic. We should be carrying cargoes of cotton goods to all the ports of the earth. Instead of that the nations send here for 80 per cent. of their raw supply, manufacture it into all forms of commodities, outsell us in all the world's markets, and even successfully ship the manufactured goods back to the Americans who produce the raw supply. Switzerland, for example, which grows no cotton, whose mountains yield no coal for its factories, a country that has not an inch of seacoast or a plank afloat, sends to us, in the ships of other nations, more finished cotton goods than we export to all the countries of continental Europe combined.

America's future, when she realizes her heritage and opportunity in cotton, will eclipse anything that has been foretold for this republic. It is only within the last hundred years that cotton has conquered the world. The career of this plant has scarcely begun. The remarkable pace in its progress to power is revealed by the quaint fact that in 1784 eight bags of American cotton were seized by the customs authorities at Liverpool, the sage British verdict being that the importation was fraudulent, as so much cotton could not possibly be produced in one year in America! In Napoleon's campaigns thousands of the wounded could have been saved had there been an adequate supply of cotton for bandages.

Before Eli Whitney's time it took a man in his home two years to separate one bale of cotton from the seed. The yield of cotton thus handicapped on its way to the wearer was unimportant. There had been cotton from remote antiquity. The mummies of Peru were wrapped in it. The ancient Hindus wove it, and by some forgotten art the weaving was 5,000 times finer than is to be found in any of the fabrics of modern times. Cotton was a sacred thread among the Brahmans, and the theft of it a serious crime. In the gardens of Chinese temples at the present day a special variety of cotton-plant is found which is nowhere else grown. From its yield the vestments of the Confucian priests are made.

Great Britain has made an organized and scientific effort to raise a supply that would make her independent of America, for the statesmen of that empire foresee the possibilities of the day when America, rising to a recognition of her right, will manufacture her own cotton and sell it to the world. But Great Britain, with her grip upon all available areas, after many years of unsuccessful effort, has had to and must come continually to America for her supply.

The Standard Oil Company has made it possible to illumine millions of homes that otherwise would be in darkness, but this has been made practicable only through the cotton wick. When you are born they wrap you in cotton; when you die they bury you in a cotton shroud. Throughout life cotton is most constantly with man. It is his closest companion by day and keeps him comfortable at night. Cotton is spread upon his tables; it is in the upholstering of his chairs. If he takes a ride on the Flying Limited it is cotton waste in the wheel-boxes, through which lubricating-oil is fed to the running-gear, that insures a continuous trip. This is an electrical age, but without cotton insulation on the wires the might of electricity would be a menace.

Cotton has within itself, under the guiding hand of the country which produces it, the power to bring about ultimate world-peace. The United States, by prohibiting the exportation of raw cotton cargoes to England, Germany, France, Italy and Switzerland, could inflict hopeless industrial paralysis and financial panic upon those lands. The balance of power is in our hands to a most remarkable degree, but we treat it with indifference.

One word from America that it would withhold supplies of cotton would bring all Europe to terms of comity.

In the meantime, and until we reach the realization of the potency of cotton, if nations continue to waste their substance (and their purchasing power), in war, cotton will continue to be found indispensable in conflict. It is guncotton that hurls destruction through the ranks, and it is cotton that binds up the wounds of the fallen. The Japanese in their recent war, through an unrivaled system of surgery and hospital service, reduced the death-rate of the wounded to an unprecedented minimum. Without cotton that would have been impossible. And it is in cotton khaki that the armies march. And they make their bivouacs under cotton tents.

Cotton is indeed first in war, as it is first in peace!

Now we are entering a new age, the age of aerial flight, and the aeroplane is a cotton chariot! On these wings of cotton we have begun to fly through the heavens at 30 and 40 miles an hour, and the end is not yet.

It is easy to forget, or at least to fail to keep in mind, that cotton cloth, the cloth of the civilized masses, without which they would become barbarians, is the product of a plant. Cloth grown from the soil! If by some botanical necromancy we could grow finished garments in the fields, and if these garments could be produced in like quantities in no other part of the earth, every man would instantly realize that America possessed a monopoly which would make all other nations our petitioners. Yet we have that monopoly as assured as it would be if we harvested clothing ready to wear, for if we ourselves produced the garments that we by our toil in the south enable Europe and Japan to manufacture, we would possess almost an exclusive supply of the cloth and clothing already needed by at least one-half of the human race.

Men cannot, if they would, again depend for their clothing upon the skins of wild animals. These beasts have practically vanished. Nor is there enough wilderness on the globe to furnish a range for the rearing of sufficient animals to provide garments of skins for mankind. The world of men and women is clothed to-day as never before. It is only within the last century, with cotton within the reach of the multitude, that the majority have been adequately clothed. The heroes of the revolution were half clad and that half was rags.

And it is one of the interesting ironies of history that during that period, when the problem of clothes was supreme, both in America and abroad, Richard Arkwright, who invented the spinning-frame, and James Hargreaves, who invented the spinning-jenny, creations which were to change the history of the race, had their machines destroyed by the enraged and half-clad populace, who feared the competition of these labor-saving devices.

We smile at the short-sighted folly of that day, and yet the progress in the use and manufacture of cotton will be as tremendous in the coming years as in the past. There is an actual kingship for cotton, not only commercially but politically; and this sovereignty of cotton in America I believe to be at hand.

We shall awake to our new destiny as a world-power and trading nation when we realize fully that the southern section of our republic is virtually the exclusive source of a commodity absolutely indispensable to the myriads of mankind from New York to Shanghai, from Nome to Montevideo, from London to the Cape. Less than one and a quarter million Americans, in 14 states of this union, hold in their hands the comfort, the luxury, the destiny of mankind.

An enormous profit is made somewhere in the progress of cotton to the consumer. Every year cotton goods to the value of nearly six billion dollars are turned out from the 125,000,000 spindles in the world. But the poor farmer in the cotton-fields sees but a pitiful part of the multiplying fortunes attending the migration of cotton goods around the earth. The southerner sells raw cotton to Japan, and the mills at Osaka turn out products that outsell our goods in Shanghai and Canton; and the Japanese cotton-manufacturer, traveling in state to America, may wonder wherein the half-fed southern farmer—a vassal tenant—following his one mule in the furrow, has advanced in civilization over the only recently awakened pagan of the east.

The ordinary grower of cotton cultivates 20 acres, producing one-half a bale to the acre. Unfortunately, in too great a majority of cases he is a tenant farmer. Of his ten bales, the result of his year's toil, five must go to the owner of the land. The working farmer, for his product, gets, we will say, ten cents a pound or $50 a bale, his 12 months of effort and expense bringing him in a gross revenue of $250. This is an insignificant total for the man who among others produces the commodity that controls the world.

Out of that $250 he must provide for his family, himself and his mule, and make provision for the ensuing times of planting and cultivating. Fully 65 per cent. of America's cotton is produced by this struggling method. Up to 1903, when the great movement in cotton prices blessed the southern industry with the transforming gleam of prosperity, 90 per cent. of our cotton crop was harvested in this same hopeless way.

Ask Her This Question

"Do you know of any woman who ever received any benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?"

If any woman who is suffering with any ailment peculiar to her sex will ask her neighbors this question, she will be surprised at the result. There is hardly a community in this country where women cannot be found who have been restored to health by this famous old remedy, made exclusively from a simple formula of roots and herbs.

During the past 30 years we have published thousands of letters from these grateful women who have been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and never in all that time have we published a testimonial without the writer's special permission. Never have we knowingly published a testimonial that was not truthful and genuine. Here is one just received a few days ago. If anyone doubts that this is a true and honest statement of a woman's experience with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound write and ask her.

Houston, Texas.—"When I first began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a total wreck. I had been sick for three years with female troubles, chronic dyspepsia, and a liver trouble. I had tried several doctor's medicines, but nothing did me any good.

"For three years I lived on medicines and thought I would never get well, when I read an advertisment of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and was advised to try it.

"My husband got me one bottle of the Compound, and it did me so much good I continued its use. I am now a well woman and enjoy the best of health.

"I advise all women suffering from such troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. They won't regret it, for it will surely cure you."—Mrs. Bessie L. Hicks, 819 Cleveland St., Houston.

Any woman who is sick and suffering is foolish surely not to give such a medicine as this a trial. Why should it not do her as much good as it did Mrs. Hicks.

Shall We Condemn a Sky Highway?

The project of condemning the air, while in a sense novel, would be perfectly feasible from a legal standpoint. There is apparently no question as to the power to establish such a highway. Moreover, it would possess the rare virtue of involving little or no expense. Granting that the air stratum condemned should be at such a height as not to interfere with the most ambitious building operations, six cents would seem to be full remuneration for the property taken from any individual owner for public purposes. The simple European expedient of declaring the air to be a highway by statute, without exercise of eminent domain, would hardly seem practicable in this country, as constituting a taking of property without due compensation, unless the courts hold, as suggested, that the air is already a public highway above the height of effective possession.—Lyttleton Fox, in North American Review.

His First Chance.

Promotion Due to Mistake

Arthur Wing Pinero, whose name figures among the recipients of a knighthood in the honors list, relates with much amusement how a "mistake" won him his first engagement as an actor in London. In the early days of his career he played a small part in Wilkie Collins' drama, "The Woman in White," when it was performed in Liverpool. The novelist was present at the first performance and was greatly impressed by the acting of a leading member of the company. Anxious to secure him for the production of one of his plays that was about to appear in London, Wilkie Collins drew the London manager's attention to his name on the playbill. At least that is what he thought he had done when he recommended for immediate engagement A. W. Pinero.

At night I cleansed my limbs but felt a prickly sensation. I paid no attention to it for two years but I noticed a scum on my legs like fish scales. I did not attend to it until it came to be too itchy and sore and began getting two running sores. My ankles were all sore and scabby and I could not wear shoes. I had to use carpet and felt slippers for weeks. I got a cake of the Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment. Pla-Mate Shoes because they follow the lines of the natural foot and allow perfect development. Think what that means, you parents who suffer from corns, bunions, etc., as a result of wearing shoes, when you were young, which contracted the foot. Pla-Mate Shoes come in sizes 4 to 13 in button, lace and oxford styles and made in all suitable leathers. The price may be a little higher than you are now paying, but think of the comfort the children will have, and consider that the material and workmanship that goes into every pair of Pla-Mate Shoes makes them outwear two pairs of ordinary shoes. If your shoe dealer does not keep Pla-Mate Shoes send us his name, stating the size and style of shoe you want and we will see that you are promptly supplied.
Are Best for Little Folks

TRAGEDY AT ST. CLOUD

FORMER M'LS. PEOPLE

Her Back Is Broken in Attempting to Escape by Jumping From Second-story Window.—Result of Separation.

St. Cloud, Minn.—Following an attempt to kill his wife in their home, Frank Scherer committed suicide by drinking carbolic acid. Mrs. Scherer escaped by jumping from a second-story window, breaking her back and sustaining internal injuries. She is in a hospital in a critical condition and cannot live.

Scherer died 15 minutes after reaching the hospital.

The tragedy was the result of marital trouble.

Scherer was arraigned in court on the charge of threatening to kill his wife, but the case was continued one week to effect a reconciliation if possible.

Scherer was the nominal proprietor of a saloon which his wife really owned and she announced her intention to evict him and secure a divorce. She stayed at the Fifth Avenue hotel, away from her husband.

At 6:30 in the morning her husband approached her in an effort to induce her to live with him. A quarrel followed and he beat her terribly about the face and body. He said he was going to shoot her, but she leaped from a window onto the cement pavement. Thinking she was dead, Scherer took an ounce of acid. He went down into the street and said:

"I have done it, but I can walk to the police station before I die. Take care of my wife."

They were married nine years ago. Scherer was jealous of his wife and claimed attention was paid her by others. They were formerly residents of Minneapolis, coming here four months ago.

TROBEC GOING TO WINONA.

Bishop Will Attend Convention of German Catholic Societies.

Winona, Minnesota.—Rev. Father ther J. Meier, pastor of St. Joseph's Catholic church here, which will entertain the conventions of German Catholic societies to be held there at the end of this month, has returned from a trip to St. Cloud, where he secured a promise from Bishop Trobec that he will attend the conventions here. He will celebrate pontifical high mass on Sept. 24. Father Meier also secured a promise from Rt. Rev. Abbott Peter J. Engel, of Collegeville, that he will also attend the conventions.

Safeblowers at Pipestone.

Pipestone, Minnesota.—After piling fifty sacks of flour about the safe in the postoffice at Hatfield, six miles south of Pipestone, robbers blew open the safe, completely demolishing it and securing the contents, amounting to $55 of the money order branch of the office, over $40 in stamps of small denominations and a small sum belonging to Postmaster Edward Zimmerman.

OLDEST MERCHANT DEAD.

Winona Man Run Store for Fifty Years.

Winona.—Chas. Suffrins, who held the distinction of being the oldest merchant in Minnesota at the time of his retirement a year ago, is dead at Pickwick, this county, aged 85. He established himself in the general merchandise business at Pickwick 50 years ago and continued until compelled to give up because of old age.

Pleads Guilty and Is Fined.

Red Wing.—Deputy Game Warden B. F. Seiz arrested John Foster, a Bay City, Wis., fisherman, for illegal net fishing in Minnesota. Foster pleaded guilty and was fined $50 and costs. Six other Wisconsin fishermen were caught operating a 1,000-foot seine, but defied the officer, threatening to do him bodily harm if he attempted to make the arrest. The outlaws escaped, but their names have been secured and warrants for their arrest placed in the hands of the Wisconsin sheriff.

A RECORD ATTENDANCE.

The Minnesota State Fair Draws Largest Crowd in its History.

Hamline.—Thursday, generally a busy day at Minnesota state fairs, brought out nearly 25,000 people.

The total figures for the day, however, probably will reach 45,000. At 9 a. m., 4,818 persons had passed the turnstile as against 5,686 for last year and 4,752 for 1907.

The younger generation has been temporarily swept from prominence, giving way to the territorial pioneers who held their annual reunion. The association's commodious log cabin was filed with the "old boys" who turned out to exchange reminences.

The total gate receipts for the first three days of the 1909 state fair, as given by the fair's treasurer, are $94,062.65. For Monday, the receipts were $52,483.55; Tuesday, $22,283.14; Wednesday, $19,192.96.

Total receipts for the corresponding three days in 1908, when the fair made a profit for the week of $80,000 were $87,038.45. The receipts each day were: Monday, $19,483.95; Tuesday, $32,296.45; Wednesday, $35,308.05.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The annual reunion of the association of the Minnesota Civil War Veterans was held on the state fair grounds, where the fair is in progress. The old soldiers met at the Administration building at two o'clock and marched thru the grounds, led by a band and the Morgan G. A. R. drum corps of Minneapolis. After the regular business of the meeting they were addressed by B. F. Nelson, president of the Minnesota State Agricultural society.

Hamline, Minnesota.—On the closing day of the State Fair, Ralph de Palma broke the mile, three mile and ten-mile world's automobile records, for circular tracks. His time for the three distances was, 50 4-5 seconds, 2.37½ and 8.59 3-5. His car is a Fiat.

THREE DIE IN WHITE BEAR FIRE.

Three Children Perish Out of a Family of Thirteen.

St. Paul, Minn.—Fire destroyed the summer cottage of Robert A. Walsh, of St. Paul, at White Bear lake, and three children of a family of 13, Constance, aged 9 months; Robert, aged 4 years, and John, aged 5 years, were burned to death.

William, another son, 9 years old, was terribly burned about the head, arms and chest in his heroic efforts to save his little brothers and sisters, six of whom were sleeping in the second story of the cottage.

Sarah, another daughter, was badly burned about the arms in her efforts to help the imprisoned babies on the second floor. Mr. Walsh, the father, was also badly burned. He received his injuries from the explosion of a gasoline stove in the kitchen, which exploded when he attempted to fill the reservoir, supposing that none of the burners were lighted. One, however, had been left burning and when he poured the gasoline into the tank the gas caught fire.

The fire immediately spread thru out the frame structure and it was a roaring furnace in a few minutes.

Six children, including those dead, were sleeping on the second floor and were practically imprisoned by the flames. The rest of the family of 13 children and the parents were downstairs.

William, who is now in St. Joseph's hospital, St. Paul, might have escaped without injury had he not remained to assist his less fortunate brothers and sisters. He was finally compelled to jump from a second-story window.

Shipwrecked Boy Alive.

Crookston.—Fred Asselin, a Crookston boy, shipped as a sailor on the vessel London Hill from Everett, Wash., for a trip around the Horn to Dublin, Ireland, with a cargo of lumber last April.

The vessel was wrecked off the coast of Uruguay, and several lives were lost, among whom, it was supposed, was young Asselin.

A letter has arrived from him informing his parents of his safety.

He is now at Montevideo, Uruguay, and will ship out on the first vessel.

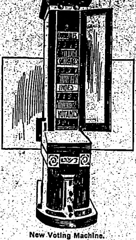
Wants Gas Plant Franchise.

Brainerd.—Capitalist Frank Farnum, a former resident of Brainerd, now of St. Paul, presented a request to the city council for a franchise for a gas plant in this city. He asked for an exclusive franchise for twenty-five years, and the matter was referred to a committee consisting of one from each ward. As the majority of the council were elected as municipal ownership men, the probability is against the granting of the franchise [illegible]

STOPS CROOKED VOTING

Italian Civil Engineer Invents the "Psephograph" to Foil Ballot Box Stuffers.

Rome.—European ballot box stuffers, who are as expert as any of Boss Tweed's henchmen ever were in the palmiest days of corruption in New York politics, soon will find their occupation gone. An Italian civil engineer, Signor Gogiano, has invented a voting machine which, it is claimed, is absolutely "ungetatable" and incorruptible. He calls this invention the psephograph. So complete and satisfactory has this machine proved that it had been adopted by both the Italian and the French governments.



New Voting Machine.

The psephograph is a little over a yard in height and is provided with as many openings as there are candidates in the field. The voter presents his card to an official who has charge of the voting booth and receives a small metal chip about the size of an American dime. He is then given permission to enter the booth and steps behind two screens which render him invisible to both the public and the overseers alike. There he finds the voting machine facing him.

After carefully scanning the different slots, above which is a space containing the names of the candidates, he selects the one he wishes to vote for and drops his chip in the slot corresponding to it. The fall of the chip causes an interior lever to rise, this movement making the number of persons voting appear on a little tablet on the outside, which is always visible, and in the interior registering the vote for the chosen candidate. When the voting is over the officer in charge lifts aside the metal covering on which is registered the number of persons voting and the number of votes obtained by each candidate is revealed. By this system 87,000 votes were cast in two hours at a recent election at Turin.

GETS A GOLDEN CROWN

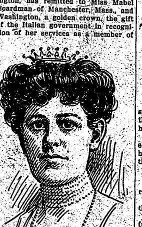
Boston.—The Marquis de Montagliari, Italian charge d'affairs at Washington, has remitted to Miss Mabel Boardman of Manchester, Mass., and Washington, a golden crown, the gift of the Italian government in recognition of her services as a member of the American Red Cross society to the victims of the recent Italian earthquake.



Miss Boardman.

The crown, a reproduction of the ancient Roman civic crown, is composed of oak leaves and acorns, made of solid gold. It is inclosed in a typical Roman box of leather, which is adorned by the royal coat-of-arms in gold. On the crown is engraved:

"To Miss Mabel Boardman of the Red Cross, from the Italian Government, as a Token of Gratitude, 1908-1909."

Miss Boardman, as the executive head of the Red Cross society, recently announced her intention to devote her life entirely to its interests. She is the sister-in-law of Senator Crane and was a member of the famous Taft Philippine party. While visiting Japan she saw the evidence of the work of the Red Cross in the Russo-Japanese war and was impressed with the boundless possibilities of the movement. She is an intimate friend of both President and Mrs. Taft.

Ice in Tropics Is Expensive.

Artificial ice making in the tropics comes high. Water of 60 degrees or 65 degrees can easily and cheaply be thrown into icy ingots of cooling joy, but when it comes to cooling water of 75 or 80 degrees the difficulty is strangely increased, even to doubling prices. Ice in Buenos Aires retails for $1.25 gold a hundred, yet Buenos Aires is a fairly liberal ice town and would be a great consumer of a cheap and plentiful product.

Physicians Recommend Castoria

CASTORIA has met with pronounced favor on the part of physicians, pharmaceutical societies and medical authorities. It is used by physicians with results most gratifying. The extended use of Castoria is unquestionably the result of three facts: First—The indisputable evidence that it is harmless: Second—That it not only allays stomach pains and quiets the nerves, but assimilates the food: Third—It is an agreeable and perfect substitute for Castor Oil. It is absolutely safe. It does not contain any Opium, Morphine, or other narcotic and does not stupefy. It is unlike Soothing Syrups, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, etc. This is a good deal for a Medical Journal to say. Our duty, however, is to expose danger and record the means of advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge, Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health, by regulating the system—not by stupefying it—and our readers are entitled to the information.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. B. Halstead Scott, of Chicago, Ills., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria often for infants during my practice, and find it very satisfactory."

Dr. William Belmont, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "Your Castoria stands first in its class. In my thirty years of practice I can say I never have found anything that so filled the place."

Dr. J. H. Taft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria and found it an excellent remedy in my household and private practice for many years. The formula is excellent."

Dr. R. J. Hamlen, of Detroit, Mich., says: "I prescribe your Castoria extensively, as I have never found anything to equal it for children's troubles. I am aware that there are imitations in the field, but I always see that my patients get Fletcher's."

Dr. Wm. J McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have in my years of practice found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Dr. J. R. Clausen, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "The name that your Castoria has made for itself in the tens of thousands of homes blessed by the presence of children, scarcely needs to be supplemented by the endorsement of the medical profession, but I, for one, most heartily endorse it and believe it an excellent remedy."

Dr. R. M. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Physicians generally do not prescribe proprietary preparations, but in the case of Castoria my experience, like that of many other physicians, has taught me to make an exception. I prescribe your Castoria in my practice because I have found it to be a thoroughly reliable remedy for children's complaints. Any physician who has raised a family, as I have, will join me in heartiest recommendation of Castoria."

THE TROUBLE.

"Don't take it so hard," said the sympathetic friend; "remember that though your daughter is married you have not lost her."

"I know it," sobbed the bride's mother. "That's the trouble. Julia and her husband have already picked out the best room in the house for theirs."

"This is where you get off," said the railroad conductor.

"But I haven't rid fur enough," said the Billville man.

The Doctors' Orders.

A lady whose husband seemed to be doing little but lie in the hammock and eat apples, was asked by a sympathetic neighbor what the trouble with him was. "Doctors," she replied, sadly. "No, he hasn't come into a fortune." A writer in To-Day's Magazine tells the story.

"You see," explained the wife, "he's been having some sort of matter with his stomach, and he consulted two different doctors about it. One told him to eat a ripe apple every hour, and the other said to rest an hour after eating. So he's trying to do both."

TYSSELING-DE REUS.

Wedding of Prominent People Wednesday, Sept. 15.

Wylie, Minn.—Wednesday, September 15, 1909, at 12 M., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Tysseling, two and a half miles northeast of Rose Hill, occurred the marriage of their daughter, Bertha, to Marinus De Reus of Leighton, Iowa, Rev. William Duiker of the Leighton Reformed Church, pronouncing the ceremony in the ritual service of the church, using the ring service, Rev. Tennant of Rose Hill, pronouncing the benediction.

The wedding march was from Mendellsohn's "Wedding March" played by Bessie Synhorst of Leighton. Rev. Tennant sang "O, Promise Me," just before the wedding march was taken up.

After congratulations, a three-course dinner was served by Eva Tysseling and Mrs. C. B. Cruzen, sisters of the bride, assisted by Mrs. W. L Rowland, Mrs. Fred Coffin, Mrs. Abel Hawley, May Klaaren, Hattie and May Veenstra, Gretta Vander Haar, Lottie Dykstra, Minnie Vander Waal, Bessie Synhorst. The dinner was prepared by the mother, the bride, sisters, and Mrs. J. N. Moore of Rose Hill.

The bride wore white silk, made princess, trimmed in Valinciennes lace, and carried bride's roses and maiden-hair ferns. The groom wore conventional black.

The southwest parlor was handsomely decorated in goldenrod and ferns, the bower in the corner being especially pretty.

The groom is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. De Reus of Leighton, and is engaged in the general merchandise business at Leighton, Ia. Miss Tysseling, the bride, is a popular young lady in this community and will be a great addition to Leighton society circles. There the beautiful home is all ready for the bride. They will be at home after October 1, 1909.

Those from out of town were old friends of the parents, with young friends of the contracting parties; and including children and families present, there were an even hundred.

Those from a distance were: From Oskaloosa, B. F. Cruzon and wife, J. F. Cruzen and wife, S. Cruzen and wife, E. Coffin and wife, Fred Coffin and wife, and Kryne Ver Ploeg; from Wylie, Minn., Mrs. C. B. Cruzen and family; from Erskine, Minn., Miss Minnie Vander Waal; from Sully, Iowa, John and Gertrude Varenkamp; from Knoxville, Tunis Tysseling; from Pella, Peter Tysseling and wife, Will and Henry Tysseling, H. A. Tysseling, N. T. Tysseling, P. G. Gaass and wife, George Gaass and wife, and J. C. De Bruin and wife; from Leighton, Lottie Dykstra, Hattie and May Veenstra, Gretta Vander Haar, Mae Klaaren, Martha Overbergen, Rena Meppelink, Avis Van Howeling, Gertrude De Cook, A. M. De Reus, M. De Reus, Mr. and Mrs. G. Meppelink, L. Overbergen, Mr. and Mrs. S. S. De Cook, Mr. and Mrs. A. Carver, N. Meppelink, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Van Henkelom, Peter Vander Haar, William and Richard Synhorst, Mr. and Mrs. D. Van Howeling, Conrad Ver Ploeg, Anna Meppelink, Lena, Ansia and Golda Tysseling, Mae De Reus, Mr. and Mrs. Art De Reus and family; from What Cheer, H. M. Tysseling.

These, with the following from Rose Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Rowland, Mr. and Mrs. Hawley and daughter, Velma, Mayme Slocum and Nellie Hollingsworth, completed the wedding party and a jolly party it was, for with music and auto rides, the afternoon soon passed away and the good-byes were said.

The presents were too numerous to mention and were especially pleasing. The wedding party left on the Rock Island for the west at 9:30 p. m.

The bride's parents were former residents of Red Lake county and will be remembered by many readers of the Gazette.

A LION HUNT.

Usually a Case in Which Hunters Goad the Game Into Combat.

There is a distinction in Africa between ordinary lions and "man eaters," says T. R. MacMechen in McClure's Magazine. The ordinary lion does not willfully attack man. The presence of lions roaming at night on the veldt is not disturbing to any native nor to whites who have come to understand the beast. Persons returning to their camps after nightfall do not notice the roaring of lions or the cries of leopards or hyenas.

It is seldom that people bent upon domestic errands carry weapons in the darkness, although at night the veldt of British East Africa is alive with roaming beasts, which may be heard from the verandas of the houses. Lions give the passing man a wide berth, day or night, when it is apparent that he means no mischief. An ordinary lion, even when wounded, will try flight before fight. When its escape is disputed it will, especially if wounded, try to maul its enemy with teeth and claws.

A lion hunt is usually a chase in which the hunters goad the game into combat. Once a lion has tasted human blood, however, it is no more afraid of man, but learns that he is the weakest of animals and the choicest of meat. Such a lion is known as a man eater because now he hunts man.

Perfectly Reckless.

The members of the church voted that their dearly-beloved and devoted pastor should have a vacation, and so he decided that he would visit a brother worker in the neighboring village. This good brother, recognizing his fellow worker in the Lord way back among the congregation on Sunday morning and wishing to show every courtesy, asked him to lead in prayer. But the visitor calmly replied: "You'll have to excuse me, dear brother,

A. P. TOUPIN UNDER THE PLUM TREE

Well Known Red Lake Falls Man Lands a Government Job.

Will be Register of the United States Land Office at Crookston.

A. P. Toupin of this city is to receive the appointment to an excellent government position. R. J. Montague, register of the United States land office at Crookston, has resigned and the Gazette has it on good authority that the position has been tendered to Mr. Toupin.

The official announcement of the appointment has not been made, but it is expected that it will come from Washington in a few days.

Mr. Toupin is a man whose ability and business experience qualify him for the position and his many friends here congratulate him on his good fortune. Mr. Toupin has not made definite plans for the future, but his family will continue to reside in Red Lake Falls for some time at least.

GOV. EBERHART'S TRYING POSITION

As Successor to Governor Johnson He Has Hard Duties to Perform.

Political Conditions Changed—The Busy Politicians Will Get Busier.

[Special correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, Sept.—While my last letter was written before the fatal termination of Governor Johnson's illness, I anticipated the result, which has brought sorrow to the State. Others much abler than I and better informed have eulogized the Governor's virtues and recorded his achievements. I do not wish to add anything to what has been said more than to refer to the Governor as a man who in every relation of life made full use of the brilliant and useful talents with which he was endowed and faithfully and fearlessly discharged every duty as he saw that duty to be. No doubt many of your readers are familiar with that part of the catechism of the Episcopal church in which the question "What is my duty towards my neighbor?" is answered. It thus concludes: "Not to covet nor desire other men's goods but to learn and labor truly to get mine own living, and to do my duty in that state of life unto which it has pleased God to call me." Surely no man more fully than Governor Johnson has lived up to the ideal of the Christian life thus outlined by the fathers of the church.

Eberhart's Talk

We may well believe that Governor Eberhart has taken up reluctantly the tasks Mr. Johnson laid down. In many respects, however, his situation is a fortunate one. He owes his position to the dispensations of Providence and not, as is generally the case to the efforts of interested politicians. To gain it he has had to contract no political debts. He is under no obligation to use the patronage of the state to reward his supporters. He need think of nothing else than how best to use the powers and discharge the duties of the executive office in the public interest. His success will be measured by the faithfulness and disinterestedness with which he does this.

Speculations as to his Course

That is the reason why so much interest is now taken in the counsels to which he will listen and in knowing the men he will take into his confidence. It is yet too early to predict what their character will be. It is, however, not too early to observe the signs of the struggles that are being made to reach the executive ear and the plans that are being laid by interested politicians to use the executive office for their own advantage or for the advantage of the interests which control them. These politicians were active indeed before Governor Johnson was in his grave, and made use of the opportunities afforded them by the presence in the city of representative men from all over the state to form combinations which they hoped would have their bearing in shaping political events. Up to the present, however, the Governor has kept his own counsel, and there is yet not much to indicate what alliance he will make.

The Governor's Appointments

The first indication of this will be in the appointments the Governor will make. There is one position that the Governor must fill at once. It is, however, one of the greatest importance as indicating that character of his administration. I refer to that of private secretary. During many previous administrations, and perhaps more especially during the last, the private secretary of the Governor has been selected because of his skill as a party manager. Mr. Day was something more than that; he was the close personal friend of the Governor and devoted to his interests. It is naturally expected that Governor Eberhart will follow Governor Johnson's example and that his private secretary will have full sympathy with the political ambitions he is known to entertain. The appointment will no doubt be announced before this letter reaches its readers.

Some Aspirants

Up to the present time, however, it has not been made, but at the same time it is known that great pleasure has been brought to bear on the Governor from various directions to influence his choice. In this the hand of the brewers, of the railroads and of the standpat element is almost equally seen, and it is believed that the temperance and county option forces have not been entirely quiescent. Among those who have been mentioned are Gus Widell, a prominent politician of Mankato, who has been associated politically and in a business way with the Governor; James A. Martin, the secretary of the Republican State Central committee; Walter Lemon of St. Paul, prominent for years in the city and county organization, and Frank Eddy, ex-Congressman, manager of the Republica npress bureau in the last campaign and lecturer for the Uplift Society, a temperance organiza-

MONUMENT TO GOV. JOHNSON

The suggestion has been made that the people of Minnesota give lasting expression to thir love and esteem for Governor John A. Johnson in the erection of a suitable monument in front of the State Capitol in St. Paul. The suggestion was first made by the Hon. C. D. O'Brien in a letter to the Pioneer Press on Wednesday, as follows:

"There are vacant pedestals in front of the great white capitol in which he the first native born governor of Minnesota, so well and justly fulfilled all his duties as our chief executive officer. Would it not be well that all the people of the state regardless of party affiliations should join in placing upon one of those pedestals the statue of the dear friend and faithful citizen and governor, whom we have loved and lost?"

In prompt response to the above a large number of the leading men of the state signed a letter endorsing the suggestion of Mr. O'Brien, requesting that he undertake a popular subscription, the maximum amount to be contributed by any one person to be $1.00. It was also suggested that the press of the state, thru their columns, invite subscriptions from all those people of the state who loved Governor Johnson and wish to help in the erection of a suitable monument that will commemorate his memory. Mr. O'Brien has requested that the Pioneer Press take charge of all subscriptions, appoint a proper committee for procuring the statue and arrange with the proper authorities for its being placed at the capitol and to this request the Pioneer Press has acceded.

The Gazette believes that the people of Red Lake county will be ready to do their full share in contributing funds to the erection of an enduring monument to the memory of the chief executive whom they have loved and lost and to facilitate the collection of and forwarding of subscriptions from this county the following coupon may be used and all subscriptions will be acknowledged in these columns.

John Albert Johnson Memorial Fund.

……………………1900

To the Gazette:

Enclosed herewith find $……as a contribution to the fund to be used for the erection in the state capitol of a monument to John Albert Johnson, late governor of Minnesota.

……………………

Subscriptions limited to $1 each.

Any sum may be subscribed by any person up to one dollar, but no more. We will suggest that school subscriptions may be made the children giving from one cent up as they may wish, and in this manner the young people may share in the erection of the monument that will be erected to the memory of the governor whose life has just closed so untimely, but whose duty has been performed so creditably.

The following voluntary subscriptions have already been received:

Dr. N. M. Watson	$1.00
Marcus Johnson	1.00
H. E. Ives	1.00
A. A. Latendresse	1.00
C. R. C. Baker	1.00
W. A. Schreiter	1.00

Great Excitement in the Print Shop.

The other day a fellow walked into the Gazette office and said, "Say, I came in to pay my subscription to the Gazette and I'm going to pay it in advance." He flashed a big roll of bills and slipped one to the Gazette man. It didn't look like real money—it's been so long since there's been any money like that around this print shop. But that wasn't all. That fellow slipped another one over and it was just as big as the first one—and it wasn't any two spot either. And it wasn't any short change game; that fellow didn't have any use for change.

There was great excitement in the print shop. The devil piped it off to the force that "Harriman's ghost is in dere wid de boss."

Talk about your long time franchises. That man has a claim on the Gazette subscription department that is good for many years to come. But it may be that he is wiser than the rest of the Gazette subscribers. His subscription is paid for many years to come and he's going to get the paper for a dollar a year during all that time and the fellow who pays after Jan. 1, is going to pay a half more.

It will be funny if a lot of people don't get a hunch from what that man did. It's a fact that you couldn't do a wiser thing this fall than to pay $5 on subscription account. It would be a profitable and convenient thing to do. You will save fifty cents a year on the money invested, and a little account that often grows big because people forget about it will be taken care of. The Gazette is not urging people to pay subscriptions several years in advance, but the publishers would rather have the subscribers do that than that any should be dissatisfied because they forgot to pay until after Jan 1. The subscription price will then be $1.50 per year. There is to be three months time before the change is made so that there can be no complaint that everyone did not know of the change. You may pay as many years in advance as you wish at $1 per, but after that date the subscription price will be a half more. And as previously stated, all will be favorites; no papers will be sold for less than that amount.

DEATH RESULTS FROM ACCIDENT

Raphael Trudeau Crushed Between Traction Engine and Separator.

Died Last Saturday After Suffering from Injuries for Several Days.

Raphael Trudeau of Lake Pleasant township died last Saturday from injuries received nine days previous. The accident which had such serious consequences occurred while Mr. Trudeau was employed about a threshing rig. When the rig was being moved, Mr. Trudeau was caught between the engine and separator and badly crushed. He lived for nine days after being injured when death relieved his sufferings.

Mr. Trudeau was about fifty-five years old. He had lived in this vicinity for about twenty-five years and was well known and highly esteemed and there are many friends who sympathise with the bereaved relatives in their sad affliction.

Deceased is survived by his widow and a large family of children. Funeral services were held at Gentilly Monday afternoon.

FERGUS FALLS DISASTER

Dams Washed Out—Heavy Property Loss.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars in property loss was caused by the breaking of several power dams at Fergus Falls last Friday.

The first dam to go out put the water works and electric light system out of business. These plants had been completed only last fall, the dam and machinery of the electric light plant costing $600,000 and it is practically a total loss.

Following the breaking of this dam the water rushed down with a roar taking the Kirk dam, owned by private parties. Debris lodged against a bridge and that was swept away.

The disaster is thought to be due to the defective construction of the first dam to go out and the great force of the extra head of water carried out the other structures.

The city is without light and the people cannot be supplied with city water. Besides the heavy property loss the disaster will cause a great amount of inconvenience to the inhabitants of the city.

FIRST FOOT BALL GAME SATURDAY

Local High School Team Will Play at Fosston Saturday Afternoon.

Game With Thief River Falls on the Local Grounds October 16.

Red Lake Falls is to have a high school football team this season and the gridiron athletes have been at work for several days getting into shape for the games that are being scheduled. Each evening after school the boys are out doing stunts with the pig skin.

The team will probably not be so heavy as usual, but it is expected that a creditable showing will be made in the games to be played this fall. All of the boys are up with their school work. Supt. Koos insists that the association rules regarding scholarship shall be complied with and the boys are going after their work during the study hours with as much vim as when they are hitting it off across the football field. Though the boys are not heavy, it is expected that they will show some speed—enough, it is hoped, to keep their opponents busy.

Two games have been scheduled On Saturday the boys will go to Fosston and on two weeks from Saturday the Thief River Falls team will be taken on, the game to be played here. The local team will live up in Saturday's game against Fosston as follows:

R. Guard—Carsten Mead.
R. Tackle—Ray Lindquist.

R. End—Louis Marchand.

Will Have Large Colony.

Duluth Herald:—A plan which has for its object the colonization of about 170,000 acres of rich Northern Minnesota farming land by poor people, who are now struggling under the congested conditions of the cities, has been announced by Bishop James McGolrick of the Catholic diocese of Duluth. The land, which lies in Becker and Hubbard counties will be thrown open to desirable citizens, who satisfy the bishop that they desire to make a home for themselves in the country away from the conditions under which they now live.

By allotting twenty-five acres or more to each family, Bishop McGolrick, believes that he can furnish the nuecleus for a fine farm and a happy home to nearly 7,000 so that nearly 25,000 people who are now living in the cities, may be given opportunity Northern Minnesota.

Bishop McGolrick is sending out circulars printed in English, German and Polish to New York, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, and other great cities telling of his plan and method by which any man with good character may secure a home for himself and his family under the greatest advantages and at a minimum expense. Bishop McGolrick is anxious that many Catholics take up his offer, but he draws no sectarian lines. He proposes to see Catholic churches and schools are provided in the district, and is consequently anxious to have many of the settlers of his faith, but anybody who proves worthiness will be given consideration at his hands regardless of religious beliefs.

The land is owned by the D. S. B. Johnson Land company of St. Paul and has been given into Bishop McGolrick's hands for colonization. No sales will be made by the company and the bishop has absolute control of allotments.

The tract covers fifty miles extending from Akeley on the east to Detroit on the west, and Bishop McGolrick who has made a personal examination of the district, says it is as fine farming land as he has ever seen. Clover and timothy grow in abundance he says, and the land is fine for grazing.

The terms are as easy as they can be made. The first payment will be at the rate of $3 an acre, and the remainder, from $10 to $15 an acre, may be paid at the option of the settler. The Bishop, offers to lend $500 worth of lumber for initial buildings to all who take land, and a rebate of $1 an acre will be given to those who, at the end of two years, have six or more cows. The company will clear ten acres for each settler, so that those who enter upon the tract will be given a fine farm.

Bishop McGolrick is anxious to help the laboring class of the large cities of the United States, and the first opportunity will be given them to enter on the land. The Bishop is also considering the sending of a personal representative to Holland and induce colonists to come to this country, as he recognizes the Dutch as the best farmers as a nation, and is anxious to have a few Dutch farmers scattered through the district to show the other settlers how to farm.

OFFICER LIZEE CAPTURES A FORGER

Took the Man from the Southbound Train Monday Afternoon.

The Man Cashed Forged Check at a Roseau Bank That Day.

Chief of Police Arthur Lizee landed a forger Monday afternoon. The man was arrested on board of the afternoon Great Northern train upon instructions from the authorities of Roseau county. He had during the day cashed a check for $15 at a Roseau bank, the name of a Roseau firm having been forged. The bank officials became suspicions and upon inquiry found that the firm had not issued the check. However, the man "had fled." He walked out of town and boarded the train at the next station to the south. The authorities wired Thief River Falls and Red Lake Falls giving a good description of the man. He slipped by Thief River Falls but was landed here. He was given accommodations at the county jail and on Tuesday morning Officer Lizee took him to Badger where he was met by the sheriff and county attorney of Roseau county, who relieved him of his charge.

The man gave the name of Clarence Hamilton and said that his home is in Chicago. He was a man of good appearance and he told the authorities that he had been a traveling salesman for a Chicago clothing house. In his pocket was found another check for $15 to which the name of the same firm had been forged.

Had the man been able to get by Red Lake Falls he probably would not have been captured. The amount for which the check had been drawn was small and the authorities had not taken the precaution to wire further south than this place. The man will serve at least three years in the penitentiary at Stillwater, that being the minimum penalty for the crime of forgery.

WOOL GRADED IMPROPERLY

GROWERS' ASSOCIATION EXPOSES BUYERS' TRICK OF JUGGLING STATE'S CLIP.

OUR WOOL NOT INFERIOR

To That Raised in Any Other State, as Growers Showed at the Recent State Fair.

St. Paul.—Members of the Minnesota Sheep and Wool Growers' Association took advantage of the state fair to correct, as far as possible, the impression that exists among the wool consumers that Minnesota wool is far inferior to that of other states. President Magnus Brown says a gross injustice has been done the state by unscrupulous traders. As a result, the association is attempting to deal direct with the woolen mills.

There were four hundred odd head of sheep at the fair. Unconsciously they aided the association in its campaign of education. All they did was to stand in their pens and bleat and long for the green fields and sunshine instead of a great barn and staring thousands. Nevertheless, they have accomplished all the wool growers expected of them.

Gets Black Eye.

"Minnesota has been getting a black eye for years because of the juggling practiced by the manipulators of wool," said Mr. Brown, who was in charge of the wool demonstration booth. "I do not know why Minnesota was picked as the state to suffer, but it has been, and we are doing what we can to correct the impression. The biggest wool consumers—I mean the woolen mills—are in Philadelphia, Boston, and St. Louis. A week ago if any of these mill men had been asked what he thinks of Minnesota wool he would have said that it is far inferior to that of other states.

"Today a few of these mill men, in fact, every one who attended the state fair, has a different impression. We may not have the best wool in the country, but we are close to being in the front rank. It was the manipulators of the market who gave Minnesota its black eye.

Loses in Booming.

"It has existed for years. It was a long time before we found out about it. They chose to boom Illinois and Wisconsin wool, as well as that of some other states, as the fancy pleased them. So they took the bright wool out of our bundles and threw it in with Illinois or Wisconsin wool and sold it as such after they had removed the dark wool from Illinois and Wisconsin bundles and thrown it in with the Minnesota wool.

"In a word, they took the best we had and gave it to other states, and took the worst other states had and gave it to us. Is it any wonder that the mill men look upon Minnesota wool with disfavor? I do not know just who are responsible. The wool has been passing through many hands. It is usual for the local buyer to buy from the farmer. He sells to the state buyer and the wool then is shipped, say to Philadelphia. There there are traders who juggle it back and forth very much as wheat is juggled on the board of trade.

Shows Mill Men.

"We wanted to show the mill men what Minnesota wool really is. Therefore we invited them to this fair, explaining what we had learned of the interchange of wool in transit. We had men here from Philadelphia and St. Louis. They have seen and are convinced. I hope they will spread the news. They have promised in future to deal direct with the Minnesota wool grower. The price of Minnesota wool has been kept down to such an extent that sheep-raising for wool purposes has not been a profitable investment to many."

TORNADO AT COLERAINE.

Buildings Are Badly Damaged and Loss is Estimated at $50,000.

Duluth.—A tornado struck Coleraine, western Mesaba, and continued an hour, completely demolishing the $20,000 two-story brick block belonging to A. M. Murnike, of Eveleth.

LIKE OUR GRAIN CERTIFICATES

Those Issued in Duluth on Par With the New York Ones.

Washington.—Advocates of federal grain inspection will find both comfort and confusion in the latest reports from American consular agents on the status of the American grain trade in Germany. Consul General Skinner, Hamburg, declares that inspection certificates from Minnesota on exported grain are regarded favorably in Germany, as are those from New York, while complaints are frequently made against inspection certificates from other places.

In the long debates and hearings on the federal grain inspection bills in Washington, the Minnesota inspection system has been frequently attacked, and the standing of its export certificates assailed. The report from the American consul indicates that Minnesota has the only inspection system, aside from that at the port of New York, which is entirely acceptable to the German trade.

Consul General Skinner indicates, however, that there is a demand for a federal inspection system, or for a commercial system, in the United States which will bring all inspections up to a proper standing.

Duluth Certificates Good.

"Hamburg dealers regard with favor certificates of inspection issued at New York and Duluth," says the American consul. "Complaint is often made that at other places the inspection is less scrupulously made than it should be, and doubtless this will be the case, however carefully local exchanges look after the matter, until the whole business of inspection is taken over by the national government, as proposed, or until the commercial exchanges agree among themselves upon a system which shall be absolutely uniform, with inspectors who shall be moved from post to post at regular intervals."

The fact that Minnesota's inspection certificates, such as issued at Duluth on export grain, are backed by the state gives them their standing abroad, as the foreign dealer knows the accuracy of the inspection.

American Grain Popular.

"American grain is very popular," says Consul General Skinner, "as it is all handled by modern machinery from the time it is cut until placed on board the ship. It is practically free from all dirt, and very seldom the dirt found in American grain amounts to more than 1 per cent.

"Although there is not exactly a demand or apparent need in the trade of the deposit of official standard samples of grain at the beginning of every crop year, in the various ports in Europe, either in the consulates or elsewhere, it would undoubtedly meet with great satisfaction on the part of local business men if a sample system could be devised by which the local purchasers might be kept regularly informed of the result and qualities of the crops in the various exporting districts. Such a method would surely have a stimulating effect in years of plenty and of good crops, and in other years remove the belief sometimes current that our shippers of grain are trying to dump poor crops upon the German consumer by incorrectly classifying the various grades."

NEW COURTHOUSE OPPOSED.

Injunction Asked to Stop Work in Red Lake County.

Thief River Falls.—At a meeting of the board of county commissioners of Red Lake County, held at the county seat last Tuesday, a contract was let to Mike Brady, of Red Lake Falls, for the construction of the courthouse for the county, at a figure approximating $15,000.

A suit restraining the members of the board from constructing such a building is pending in the courts at the present time and the taxpayers who oppose the expense involved in this matter have E. T. Young, former attorney general, and City Attorney Talvorsen, of Thief River Falls, caring for their interests.

These attorneys assert that the supreme court will sustain them in their contention that a courthouse cannot be built pending the election for a division of the county, the petition for which was filed with the governor months ago.

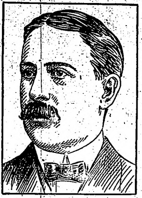
SEARS HAPPY AS FARMER

Former Head of Mail-Order House, Who Retired With $25,000,000, Works in Fields.

Chicago.—Richard W. Sears, who has retired from business with $25,000,000 made in 17 years, took charge of the threshing at his farm at Gray's Lake, Ill., the other day.

At five p. m. the man whose financial career would have been meteoric had it not been for his quiet way of doing things, was out in the fields supervising the work that the 20 men who came an hour later were to accomplish before sundown. Wearing overalls and wide-brimmed straw hat, as if he were accustomed to them, Mr. Sears surveyed his model farm as if it were the only interest he had in life. He refused to turn from it and look backward over the 17 years that have elapsed since he left his post as telegraph operator in Redwood Falls, Minn., to start the mail-order business that has grown into the greatest in the world.



Richard W. Sears.

"I'm awfully busy," he declared. "I have to look after the threshers and get this work done to day. I haven't any time to talk about myself. Never did have," he added, with a merry twinkle of his eye.

"Farmer" Sears, who has announced that he intends to devote the rest of his time to his family and his farm, is only 45 years old. He was a telegraph operator of a wayside station when an eastern watch manufacturer sent him a watch with the privilege of returning it if he could not sell it. He found that he could sell that watch and many more. So large did the watch trade he established become that he resigned his position and went to Minneapolis.

Two years later he came to Chicago and began the business career that ended recently with the sale of his stock in Sears, Roebuck & Co., to a New York syndicate and his retirement with great wealth.

Mr. Sears' family is enjoying the farm life as much as the head of the house. His four children—two boys and two girls—have been reveling in rural domesticity and say they want to be farmers too.

HALL OF CHRIST IS UNIQUE

Aula Christi at Chautauqua, N. Y., Only Building of Its Kind in the World.

Chautauqua, N. Y.—The dedication of the Aula Christi or Hall of Christ—the only building of its kind in the world, took place recently in this city. The one who first proposed the idea 16 years ago, Bishop John H. Vincent, gave the dedication address.

This new building to be devoted exclusively to the study of Christ, was erected at a cost of about $40,000. The largest single contributions to its erection were $10,000 from the Massey estate in Toronto; $5,000 from Miss Helen Gould and $3,000 from the estate of N. T. Arnold. The last $12,000 for its completion was given by Chautauquas at a single meeting last year. The building is constructed of white Roman brick, stone, steel and white terra cotta. The windows are all of historic significance presenting in chronological order events in the life of Christ.

All the books which have been written upon the life Christ, including a very large library dealing with the interpretations of Christ, and Christ in ethics, in social science and in modern civilization, are soon to be collected in one room of this hall. In another room will be collected and placed in easily accessible files copies of all the engravings or other pictures of Christ which the art of ages has brought within reach. In charge of the library and engravings will be a curator. A beautiful main audience room will be used exclusively for appropriate meetings. Already these meetings are being held in the new building. Later courses in study are to be inaugurated in the life, words and deeds of Christ and in the results of his teachings. These courses are to be conducted for both old and young. A special service is to be held in this building at least once a month throughout the entire year.

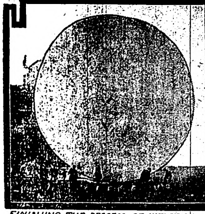
TENDERWING IN THE UPPER AIR

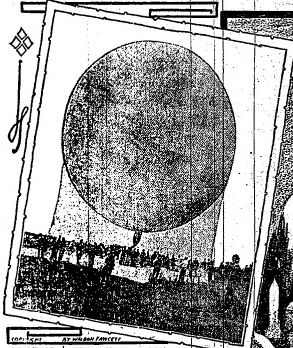
BY WINTHROP E. SCARRITT



FINISHING THE PROCESS OF INFLATION

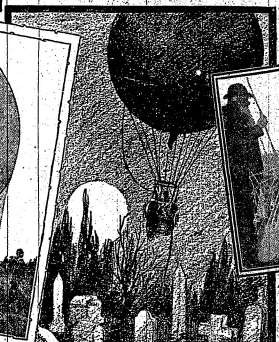
AT LAST the day of dreams had come. For had it not been a boyhood dream to step into the car of a balloon and go sailing away into the undimmed blue of the inviting sky. And now I was to cross the line which separates the kingdom of anticipation from that of realization.

I must confess that my devotions that morning were a little more protracted and fervent than usual. However, the time and the place and the man—the pilot—were most opportune, for I was to be the guest of England's foremost balloonist, that prince of splendid sportsmen, Hon. Charles S. Rolls. We were to sail over London, "the playground of history," as my talented friend, C. N. Williamson, happily phrased it.



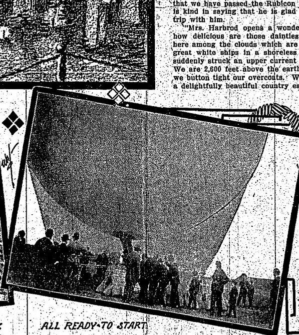
COPYRIGHT BY WALDON FAWCETT

UNCLE SAM'S NEW WAR BALLOON



Taking a taxicab at the Savoy hotel in company with some Canadian friends, we bowled along the bank of the Thames to Short's balloon works, Queens Circus, Battersea Park. It was a clear, crisp afternoon, and the touch of winter was in the air. We turned a sharp corner, and in the distance I caught my first glimpse of our aerial—might it not prove a heavenly?—chariot. It was swaying in the afternoon sun, a great golden ball 42 feet in diameter, and extending up above the housetops. Its name was the Venus. Mr. Rolls, the owner and pilot, gave us a cordial welcome. The other passengers, the Hon Mrs. Assheton Harbord and Mr. Jack Humphreys, had already arrived. Meanwhile a strong breeze had sprung up, and as I gazed at the Venus swaying to and fro in the wind and straining at the squeaking ropes, I was reminded of a nervous, blooded racehorse champing at his bits, anxious to be off. Suddenly the question came to my mind, "Where will this impatient, yellow, pot-bellied beast take us and what will it do with us when it gets us there?"

HOW THE LAND AND WATER LOOK FROM A BALLOON



ALL READY TO START

The balloon basket was about 4½ feet square and about that depth and was held to the ground by many bags of sand, each having a rope handle and weighing about 42 pounds.

It is surprising to the layman to see the number of things taken on such a journey. There were a drag-rope, an anchor-rope and anchor, a huge and well-filled lunch basket, a statoscope—an instrument which indicates whether you are ascending or descending—an anemometer, a thermometer and a barograph, a little clock-like apparatus which shows by a continuous line on a chart just how many feet one is above the earth. Also we had extra wraps, a good map of England and seven bags of sand hung on the outside as ballast.

My first surprise on stepping into the basket and looking up at the great, distended bag above was to discover that the mouth, or appendix-like opening at the bottom of the balloon, was open and that I could see straight through to the top, where was located the escape-valve. I immediately inquired if it "ought to be like that?" I was told yes, that opening was essential in order to allow the expanding gas to escape; otherwise the balloon would burst. I then inquired whether that opening was large enough to let the gas out fast enough. Mr. Rolls thought it was. But, I persisted, suppose it isn't—what will become of us? "That will depend upon your past life," was the laconic reply. Up to this moment I had felt no alarm or undue anxiety. One by one the helpers unhooked the bags of sand that had been holding us to earth. At length the basket swung clear of the ground and was only kept from ascending by a half-dozen pairs of strong hands holding it within a foot or two of the earth.

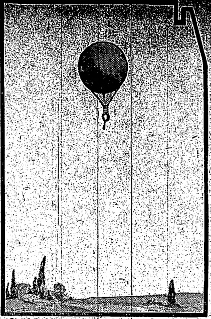
Near us was a huge gas-tank about 70 feet tall. To me it looked 700. The direction of the wind would take us directly toward it. The balloon was edged away by the helpers to the farther side of the inclosure, as far as possible from that huge round iron tank. Would we hit it? Could we by some miracle miss it? There and then I got my first fright. It was a good, big, paralyzing fright. Oh, how hard, cruel and altogether repulsive that iron tank looked! There was nothing nice about it. I sat down on a large lunch basket in the southeast corner of the car and held on for dear life. Some way I didn't feel any inclination to stand up and look about and crack jokes—which jokes seemed to me quite ill-timed—as the others were doing. Suddenly I was startled by the cry, "Let go!" I am sure Gabriel's trumpet will not frighten me so much as did that cry, "Let go!" I am still of the opinion that Mr. Rolls need not have said it so loudly. Immediately we were shot into the air as though we were an arrow hurled from a mighty bow. I literally held my breath till we cleared that ugly gas reservoir, then I looked down and saw the pale, upturned faces of my friends gazing in speechless silence. I thought, "That is the way people look at a funeral," and I was not comforted.

In less time than I am taking to tell it we were 1,000 feet above the earth. How extremely careless of these people to keep standing up and even to lean over and look down when the side of the basket is only waist-high! I suggested that the next time I should insist on a basket that would come up to one's ears. Then occurred to me the story of the hungry boy who asked for the core of the apple his friend was eating with so much gusto and received the slightly discouraging reply, "There ain't goin' to be no core." So perhaps with me there wasn't going to be any "next time."

Our altitude was now 2,000 feet and we were drifting in a light breeze straight across the city in the direction of St. Paul's cathedral, which we could easily distinguish on account of its dome of gold, which looked about the size of a large football. Just here it may be well to state that any one who thinks the pilot of a balloon has nothing to do is quite mistaken. Mr. Rolls, ably assisted by Mrs. Harbord—herself a cool and experienced balloonist who owns three fine balloons—made everything snug and taut. The various articles on board were conveniently arranged. The statoscope was keenly watched, and if we began to descend too rapidly a small scoopful of sand was gently sprinkled out. A good, clear map was at hand and as we progressed a red line was drawn indicating constantly our position. My anxiety was not lessened by a troubled look on our pilot's face.

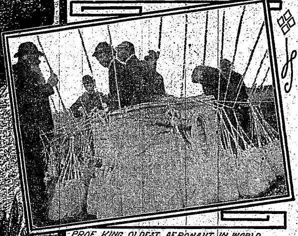
As I write these lines my open diary lies before me and I will quote therefrom:

"We left the good old earth at 2:08 p. m. It is now 2:30. My fear is gone. As I pencil these words in peace and calm we are floating eastward 2,000 feet over London. I reflect that we are crossing the Playground of History. That tiny winding stream far below is the Thames. There is the House of Parliament and that little toy church near by is Westminster abbey of blessed memories, the last resting-place of kings and queens and scholars, earth's mighty Anglo-Saxon dead for generations. Now London bridge comes into view and London tower, of evil memories. That little green-roofed building is Greenwich observatory. That golden ball is the dome of St. Paul's and beneath us is the swarming traffic of the Strand. We look far beyond the hazy rim of London and in imagination see the green meadows or Runnymede and hear the clash of arms at Marston Moor. Across the gulf of the years we can see Caesar and his conquering legions and the white cliffs of Albion. Indeed we are over the Playground of History. 2:40. Our direction is changing for the better and we are drifting north of east and hence will have a longer ride. We have dropped a thousand feet and the noises of the city grow clamorous. Mr. Rolls is throwing out sand and closely watching his statoscope.



CLEAR SAILING

"The sun is behind a cloud and our barograph shows a straight line, indicating that we are sailing on an even keel, as it were—neither ascending nor descending. This is the great desire of sky pilots. 3:10. We are outside of London. Mr. Rolls announces gleefully that we have passed the Rubicon of our difficulties. He is kind in saying that he is glad I am making my first trip with him.



PROF. KING, OLDEST AERONAUT IN WORLD BIDDING "YOUNGER BLOOD" GOOD-BYE

"Mrs. Harbrod opens a wonderful lunch-basket, and how delicious are those dainties and our hot tea up here among the clouds which are drifting lazily by like great white ships in a shoreless sea. 3:45. We have suddenly struck an upper current and have soared aloft. We are 2,600 feet above the earth. Yes, it is cold, and we button tight our overcoats. We are over Weald hall, a delightfully beautiful country estate. From the castle floats the union jack and also the stars and stripes. God grant they may ever float together in every land where civilization has a home or freedom a banner!

"Just now I looked up, and, oh, horrors! the balloon is on fire! No, I am mistaken, it is only the gas which is pouring out of the mouth of the bag. To my untrained eye it looks like smoke and I have been taught that where there is smoke there is likely to be fire. We have lost quite a lot of gas and the balloon has wrinkles and folds which do not look nice. I anxiously inquire if it ought to do like that. It looks like an enormous, leather-faced, toothless old giant getting ready to devour its victims four. I admire Mr. Humphreys' coolness through it all. Although a 'tenderwing' like my self, he is behaving better than I.

"Nothing has happened, and I am reassured again. Now we are floating on in the abyss of silence and of space. Above us, the deep blue sky; beneath us, the green fields and changing forests of Merry England.

"Did you every try to picture a sensation, or paint an emotion? I wish I might. Did you ever ponder over the soul of things? Did you ever dream that you were dead and as your spirit ascended from your body have you not looked down upon the worn-out casket and marveled at its strange stillness and quiet helplessness? This is my weird sensation as I now look down upon the earth, the grave of all things. Oh, the infinite calm and peace! We are light as air. We are free as birds. We are no longer mortals. We have been unleashed from earth and are on our happy way out into God's infinite, the near clouds our companions and the earth and all its carking cares fading away like the baseless fabric of a vision."

WESTERN CANADA

During the early days in the period of the growth of the grain crop in Western Canada, as well as throughout the ripening and garnering period, there is yearly growing an increasing interest throughout the United States, as to the results when harvest is completed. These mean much to the thousands of Americans who have made their homes in some of the three Provinces that form that vast agricultural domain, and are of considerable interest to the friends they have left behind.

The year 1909 is no disappointment. The crops of wheat, oats and barley have been harvested and it is now safe to speak of results. Careful estimates place the yield of spring wheat at 30 bushels per acre, winter wheat at over 40 bushels, and oats exceed 50 bushels per acre. Barley also has proved an abundant yield. What will attract the reading public more than volumes of figures will be the fact that those who have been induced through the influence of the Government to accept of 160 acres of free grant land; or, by the persuasion of friends to leave their home State of Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Nebraska or the other States from which people have gone, have done well. Financially, they are in a better position than many of them ever expected to be, and in the matter of health, in social conditions, they have lost nothing.

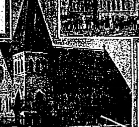
A Central Canada Farmer Finishing Cutting His 70-Acre Field of Wheat

One person who has just returned from a trip through the Lethbridge District, where winter wheat has a strong hold with farmers, says:

"We saw some magnificent sights. The crops were, in fact, all that could be desired."

County School House

Town School House



City Church in Central Canada

In a few years from now these great plains over whose breadth for years roved hundreds of thousands of herds of cattle, following the millions of buffalo that once grazed their grasses, will be a solid grain field covering a territory of over 30,000 square miles, and very little of it but what will yet be worth from $40 to $60 per acre. Already the homestead and pre-emption lands are being well filled.

In the district of Calgary, south, east and north, which comprises Nanton, High River and other equally important districts, a correspondent of the Winnipeg (Manitoba) Free Press says: (Aug. 21) "The grain in this district is going to make some money for the farmers this year. All the crop is now crowding along and is good on both irrigated and unirrigated lands."

There are to be found those who speak of a "pioneering" life in western Canada, but as one man said, "if this is pioneering I don't for the life of me see what our forefathers had to complain of." He didn't know, though, for the pioneering of his forefathers was discomfort and hardship. The opening up and development of western Canada, with its railroad lines to carry one to almost the uttermost part of it, the telegraph line to flash the news to the outside world, the telephone to talk to one's neighbor, the daily and weekly mail service which brings and carries letters to the friends in distant parts; the schools headed by college-bred and highly certificated teachers; the churches manned by brilliant divines; the clubs; the social and festive life; what is there about any of this to give to the man who goes there to make his home the credit of being a pioneer? Nothing! He might as well be in any of the old middle-west States. In other parts of the world the production of wheat is diminishing today; but as it diminishes Canada's will increase; therefore, it is safe to predict that in a few years from now a large part of the world will be looking to western Canada for its wheat supply, and especially will the United States. In many parts of western Canada it is possible to have a hundred-mile square of wheat, without a break. A writer says: "We were driven west and north of Moose Jaw through 20 miles of dead ripe wheat, acres of stocks and well-worked summer-fallows. One of these fields would yield 40 bushels to the acre, and another man had oats that would yield 90 or 100 bushels to the acre. In this district wheat will average 30 to 35 bushels. The conditions were never better and throughout the district the people are assured of a most prosperous year."

It would be unfair to close this article without quoting from an expert crop-correspondent regarding the two Battlefords in Central Saskatchewan, on the line of the Canadian Northern Railway. Writing on August 18th of this year, he says:

"It is necessary to drive about six or seven miles out of the town of North Battleford in order to see the best crops of the district. This morning I was driven about 20 miles to the north and west of the town and in all the drive did not see a poor crop. I saw one wheat crop which the owner estimates will yield 40 bushels per acre, and I believe it."

He then crossed the Saskatchewan river to the South town, or Battleford proper, and continues his report:

"Conditions around the old town are as good if not better than those to the north of the river. This district has much the best wheat crop prospect of any I have inspected this year, considering sample and yield. The weather conditions for the whole season have been ideal and the result is what might easily be termed a bumper crop. A sample sheaf brought in from the farm of George Truscott was shown to me which spoke for itself. This farmer is said to have sixty acres which will yield 45 bushels per acre.

In stating an average for the district of South Battleford I would say that the wheat will yield 36 bushels per acre. The oats will yield about 45 and barley 35 bushels per acre."

A correspondent summing up a trip over the Canadian Northern Railway, from Dauphin to Battleford, says:

"As I inspected the crops in the various districts I found the farmers and other citizens without exception filled with expectant enthusiasm over this year's prospects. No district was found which could not boast of fields of 35 bushels per acre wheat, or 50 to 60 bushels per acre oats, and of 40 bushels per acre of barley."

A Specimen Group of Elevators That May Be Seen in Many Towns in Central Canada

It is not an unusual thing in many parts of western Canada for a farmer to have 10,000 to 30,000 bushels of wheat. In the Rouleau district it is said that there are several farmers who will have 20,000 bushels of oats any many fields will return one hundred bushels to the acre.

It takes an army of men to handle the Western Canada crop, and it is estimated that 30,000 people have been brought in this year to assist in the great undertaking; there being excursions from the outside world nearly every day for the past six weeks.

FLOWER IMITATES INSECTS

Peculiar Spots on Plant That Resemble Flies—A Curious Bee Orchid.

Orchid imitations are a puzzle to flower scholars. The whole appearance of the flower is suggestive of some insect, sometimes to quite a remarkable degree. It does not seem easy to find any real purpose that could be served by this resemblance, yet no one imagines that it can be accidental.

Anyone who knew of the bee orchid, a native of Europe, and came upon it for the first time would at once recognize it. It seems to be a large velvety-brown backed bee variegated with yellow. The two lateral petals might serve well for the wings of the insect.

In the center of the lip of the [illegible] orchid there is a small bluish spot like the body of a fly. The two lateral petals are slender and curiously like the antennae of an insect. The whole illusion is complete and suggests to the casual glance that a few flies are hanging on the stem of some plant which has cast its flowers.

Origin of the Loving Cup.

Our modern loving cup doubtless is derived from the cup used in a queer custom which had its birth amidst the gallantry of the middle ages. The guests were placed two and two, man and woman together, and they drank from the same cup, and ate from the same dish, which was called "eating in the same porringer." In families the same goblet served for all. Jupiter's Eighth Moon.

The eighth satellite of Jupiter, discovered at the Greenwich observatory in January of last year, proves remarkable not only for being so far from the planet, but also for its very eccentric orbit, its distance from Jupiter varying from about 10,000,000 to 20,000,000 miles. It revolves around the planet in about 26 of our months [illegible]

Big Price for an Orchid.

Three hundred dollars was recently paid in Colombia for a single plant of a rare orchid. The natives, in order to expedite the collection of these orchids, fell the trees on which they grow, and then strip them of these floral parasites.

CONGRESSMAN COOPER of Wisconsin declares that Cannon should be destroyed. And the Winona Independent wants to know if "dismantled" wouldn't be a better word.

THE "It's a Fact" column in the St. Peter Herald of last week told a sad and simple story. Ordinarily this column treats chiefly of the lighter side of life. It is silent today. It's creator is dead."

THE many Red Lake county friends of Hon. A. P. Toupin will rejoice over his prospective appointment as receiver of the land office at Crookston. Mr. Toupin is a splendid business man and one of the county's best citizens. Congressman Steenerson is to be congratulated upon this admirable appointment.

Truly does the Little Falls Herald remark: The governor dies; the governor succeeds. And the machinery of commerce, industry and life in all its various and complex ramifications, goes on. What recks the busy world that one so dear to countless thousands has no longer a share in the world's activities. There is a brief pause, a fierce heart-wrench and then—on with the busy whirl. But nevertheless there is left the gentle memories the tender recollections, of the life that "stood upright."

IN 1898 the railroads of the United States paid $12,182,000 for damages to property and injuries to persons. In 1908 they paid $56,700,000 for such damages which was 10 millions dollars more than for the previous year. In the past decade the amount paid for damages to property increased 457 per cent and the amount paid for injury of persons increased 254 per cent In the West and Southwest these increases were greatest. In the mean time, however, the gross earnings of the railroads doubled and the net earnings have nearly trebled.

EVERYBODY will wish Governor Eberhart well. He enters upon the office under most trying and distressing circumstances. While it was generally understood that he was to be a candidate for the place next year, he, perhaps least of all, expected to be called by constitutional provision because of the death of Governor Johnson. The new governor enters office with the feeling that he is the legatee rather than the successor of the lamented Johnson, and it is not expected that he will disturb the Johnson policies or remove the Johnson appointees. Of course the dead governor was a Democrat, while Eberhart is a Republican, and it is not expected that the latter will forsake his party, but Johnson was practically a non-partisan so far as his conduct of his office was concerned and the new governor will not find it necessary to stretch his politcial conscience to approximate the same service his predecessod gave.

IT would seem as though the Lord had been good enough to the Republican party in Minnesota by giving it a 60,000 majority without taking Governor Johnson away.

In an interview at Mankato given before he was sworn in Governor Eberhart in a few well-chosen words outlined the policy of his administration.

"Not many changes in officials need be expected," said he. "Certainly, I have some knowledge of the duties of the office and while I regret to be compelled to assume them under these conditions I am not afraid to do so. I am under no obligations to anyone. and can rule the office free from any entangling alliances and free to execute the laws of the state thoroly and impartially without fear or favor and without regard to sectionalism or nationality and in accordance with the best knowledge and understanding that God has given me."

A contemporary remarks that Taft is meeting more people than any former president, and the Northfield News retorts that for that matter the people are also meeting more president.

THE Youth's Companion for Sept. 9 contains an article from the pen of the late Gov. John A. Johnson, written in his raciest vein. The governor knew all the ups and dowus of a country editor's life. He gave the following:

The story is told that soon after Chief Justice Chase assumed the gubernatorial chair in Ohio he issued his proclamation appointing a Thanksgiving day. To make sure of being orthodox, the governor composed his proclamation almost entirelv of passakes from the Bible, which he did not designate as quotations assuming that every one would recognize and admire the fitness of the words, as well as his taste in selection.

The proclamation meeting the eye of a Democratic editor he pounced upon it at once, and declared that he had read it before. He could not say just exactly where, but he would take his oath that it was a downright plagiarism from beginning to end. That would have been a pretty fair joke, but the next day a Republican editor came out valiantly in defense of the governor, pronounced the charge libelous, and challenged any man living to produce one single line of the proclamation that had appeared in print before.

A DEMOCRATIC SPIRIT.

Ackley, (Iowa) World: The death of Gov. Johnson of Minnesota, yesterday morning recalls an incident. It was the pleasure of the editor of The World, less than two weeks ago, to be privileged to meet Governor Johnson in his private office at the state capital, St. Paul. At the time we were incompany with John E. King, the present state librarian, who was for several years publisher of the Nobles County Democrat at Adrian, Minn. The democrat spirit of Johnson was strikingly noticeable; he had the happy faculty of addressing men by their christian names and he was not "puffed up" by the loftiness of the position that he occupied. Governor Johnson was loyal to his friends; he never forgot any of them and at the present time there are twelve newspaper men who are state department heads with offices under the dome of Minnesota's capitol. His private secretary is Frank Day publisher of the Fairmont Sentinel.

A TRIBUTE TO JOHNSON.

The Winona Independent says that having sustained the hard knocks of poverty in boyhood the late Gov. John A. Johnson discovered as a man those traits which, given the right material to begin with, inevitably mark the lives of those who come by that route. Courage, great will power, common sense, perseverance, cleanliness of habit, devotion, industry, freedom from frivolity without austerity, the ability to get on and by the rule of right—yet you do not exactly describe the man. These attributes are found in others who still are unlike Johnson.

His father was a drunkard and his mother took in washing. At 13 he assumed the burden of a family of seven He worked and studied and aspired and kept clean. The general store, the pharmacy, the printing office, the editor's chair, politics—these marked his course, but by almost any other route he would have succeeded as well. It was in the boy, it remained with the man. A rugged constitution and a heart strong with hope overcome every obstacle not in the theatrical way that gratifies the passion for notoriety but in the slow, toilsome tread of every day effort. Here is a heroism worthy the encomiums a nation gladly pays it.

Three times elected as a Democrat to the governorship of a Republican state, Johnson stood in strong eligibility for his party's choice for the presidency in the near future. His administration of the governor's office has been such, too, as to indicate an unquestioned eligibility for the higher post.

The life of John A. Johnson long will be referred to in American annals as an inspiration to effort in the face of obstacles and to good and useful citizenship. Had he lived, Johnson would have performed further services for his country, but little would have been added to the value of the great legacy he leaves in his life's story.

Anoka Free Press: President Taft suggests that if people want tariff revision they elect men to congress who are honest and will revise. This is precisely the idea Minnesota voters favor and it is because of the great prevalence of this idea that there are due to be many changes in congress after the next election.

Elk River Star-News: One can easily understand why some politicians want railroad interest, the brewery interest or some other big interest back of them, but the mystery comes when the people calmly stand for them in spite of these things. Foley Independent: Bishop McGolrick's plan to place a large number of poor people on vacant lands in Northern Minnesota is the kind of religion which the lowly Nazarine preached 2,000 years ago. Such work will endure long after endowed universities and libraries have crumbled to dust.

Mankato Free Press: The Madison Independent-Press says "the undesirable politician is a far greater menace to this country than the undesirable citizen." To our way of thinking there is no great difference between the undesirable politician and the undesirable citizen.

Its promoters can thank the stars, and moon as well, that it did not materialize. It never was needed. Minnesota and her people have said it. The press has repeated it. They are too proud of them to exhibit them to the gaze of the curious, on a raised platform. They have been faithful servants. In November, 1910, the congressmen can be rewarded by a vote of confidence, and the senators by electing state legislators who will vote for them at the proper time.

St. Peter Free Press: Down in the First district the machine papers are counseling the voters to let the tariff alone and boost business. The dodge is too obvious, it will never save Tawney.

Here is hoping that the "Soo" will not build any further south than the Twin Cities. That would dishearten the people down there.

Now when there are quite a few cases of throat trouble and diphtheria thruout the county, besides other good remedies, would it not be good practice to keep the wells clean to insure fresh drinking water; keep a light fire in stove: open top and bottom of windows so as to circulate dry and fresh air thru the rooms?

Scribbs suspects that Cook and Peary saw a pole up north "there", but that it might be one of their own shaping. We will likely see it coming down on the ice next summer. What is the matter with Capt. Amundson's magnetic north pole which he saw a few years ago after having made his way north thru Bering Strait? That "pole" will not drift on the ice.

In an early issue of the "Sunbeam" Editor Hunt said that since "our suburb correspondent failed to show up that week" he was a little alarmed about me getting into the suburbs of the El even Towns and got eat up by bed bugs. Can say the report was grossly exaggerated. Bed bugs, big bugs or any other kind of bugs seem to shun me. Even tho I see a few "bugs" at times, they seldom bother me.

Editor Hunt of the Sunbeam is not like the fellow who dares not break the conspiracy of silence to say something about socialists and socialism. While we see him scoring a few "strong points" against the movement we will not subject ourselves to his statements as to how, when and where the late railroad magnate, Harriman, got all his (?) "stuff." Many os us still sympathize with Gaylord Wilshire when he says: "LET THE NATION OWN THE TRUSTS."

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Every case of Rheumatism has its origin and its development in the blood. It is not a disease which is contracted like a cold, but it is in the blood and system before a pain is felt, and the changes in the weather or any physical irregularities, such as a spell of indigestion, bowel disturbance, etc., are merely the exciting causes producing the pains and aches, which are the natural symptoms of the disease. Rheumatism is caused by an excess of uric acid and other corrosive, irritating poisons in the blood, which are carried through the circulation to every part of the system. Every muscle, nerve, membrane, tissue and joint becomes saturated with these acrid, irritating impurities, or coated with fine, insoluble caustic matter, and the sharp, piercing pains or the dull, constant aches are felt with every physical movement. When the blood is filled with uric acid poison, permanent relief cannot be expected from liniments, plasters, or other external treatment. Such measures give temporary relief, but in order to conquer Rheumatism and bring about a complete cure, the uric acid and other inflammatory matter must be expelled, and this cannot be done with external treatment. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism because it is a perfect and entirely vegetable blood purifier. It goes down into the circulation, neutralizes the acids, and dissolves the irritating deposits which are pressing on the sensitive nerves and tissues and producing pain, enriches the weak, sour blood, and removes every atom of impurity from the circulation. So instead of being a weak, sour stream, distributing uric acid to the different parts of the system, the blood is strong and healthy and therefore able to supply every muscle, nerve, bone and tissue with nourishment and strength. Then the inflammation and swelling subside, the pains and aches cease, and not only is Rheumatism permanently cured, but under the fine tonic effects of S. S. S. the entire general health is benefitted and built up. In all forms of Rheumatism, whether acute or chronic, S. S. S. will be found a safe and reliable treatment. Special book on Rheumatism and any medical advice you desire will be furnished free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

Sometime ago, I had Rheumatism and had to quit work. The pain in my back and between my shoulders was so intense I could not rest or sleep. I tried everything, but nothing did me any good till I heard of and took S. S. S. This medicine cured me sound and well. It purified my blood and made me feel like a new man.
CONRAD LOHR,
Anderson, Ind. 122 E. 19th St.

I was severely troubled with Rheumatism. I had it in my knees, legs and ankles, and any one who has ever had Rheumatism knows how excruciating the pain is and how it interferes with one at work. I was truly in bad shape—having been bothered with it for ten years, off and on. A local physician advised me to use S. S. S. I did so. After taking two bottles I noticed the soreness and pain were greatly reduced. I continued the medicine and was thoroughly cured; all pain, soreness and inflammation gone. I recommend S. S. S. to all Rheumatic sufferers.

JOHNSON IS DEAD

Death Follows a Day of Anxiety Among the Watchers at the Death Bed.

Mrs. Johnson Keeps Guard at His Bedside and Comforts Her Husband's Last Hours.

Rochester, Minn., Sept. 21 (2:20 a. m.)—Gov. John A. Johnson died at 2:04 o'clock this morning.

Life quietly slipped away and in its wake there remained but the sorrow of a great state, the infinite grief of a devoted and courageous wife and the thoughts of what greatness to which his career might have expanded had not it been so sadly brought to a close.

Until death came, he was quite conscious, his firm, resolute mind fully cognizant of the approaching end and meeting it with the clear equanimity which so characterized his active life.

As the shortening hours passed by, the governor remained tranquil despite the mental anguish which he must have endured. Knowing quite well that which he could not avert, he lay quietly in his bed, waiting.

AT THE BEDSIDE.

With him during the last hours were Mrs. Johnson, Frank A. Day, Doctors Mayo, Dr. Charles F. McNevin, Miss Margaret Sullivan, Miss Jammie, head nurse of the hospital and Miss Schiller, the governor's night nurse. All the hospital attaches were those who had guarded him as best they might since the operation nearly a week ago and who had ministered to him so vigilantly.

COMFORTS HIS LAST HOURS.

Through the evening and the early morning Mrs. Johnson remained tirelessly beside him, giving the solace which only she could give. She held his hand almost constantly, and at intervals bathed both of them with alcohol. Although none could ever know how she suffered, she cheered the governor when his spirits drooped lowest. Although her husband seemed quite aware of the great weakness which was gradually flooding over him and its import, Mrs. Johnson declined to allow the physicians to tell him the time had arrived when there was no hope. Steadfast at his bedside she stayed, repressing her own grief in order that she might ease the last moments for her husband.

When death touched the still figure Dr. Will Mayo led Mrs. Johnson away to an adjoining room, where Miss Sullivan gave those comforts so needed to dull the widow's grief.

And so came the end to a state's governor, who was so deeply intrenched in the people's confidence, esteem and love.

CLING TO HOPE.

What small part of the little town of Rochester that was astir at the early hour recoiled from the news of the governor's death as though it seldom knew of suffering and death, of which it sees so much. There was still a shred of hope to which many clung, despite the discouraging tone of the afternoon and evening bulletins, but its quick snapping let fall those hopes to create only a universal sorrow.

Some time after Gov. Johnson had expired Mrs. Johnson was taken to the Sullivan home in Dr. Mayo's automobile, and she will probably remain there until the body is taken to St. Paul. It is not known how soon this will be done. It is probable, however, that it will be arranged for this forenoon, and the body will be taken to the city in the evening.

CITY OF SORROW.

The evening in this little city seemed filled with an ill portent. The almost hopeless bulletins issued from the hospital came one after another and each seemed to intensify the certainty that death was inevitable. Early in the evening the people of the town gathered in clusters about the main thoroughfares to whisper the last bit of news from the hospital. In the residence district families on their porches silently sat about, seemingly unable to think of nothing else but the approaching death.

When all hope was relinquished—after the Doctors Mayo had admitted that life was to be measured in a few hours—it was as if the town had been struck a blow. And the bedside appeal of Mrs. Johnson for prayers for the governor was silently responded to, no doubt, by hundreds who have followed, almost minute by minute, his gallant fight.

At the hospital there was even a greater quiet than that which usually obtains. If possible the nurses went about their work more noiselessly than ever and all seemed to bear the imprint of the general sadness. At intervals the Doctors Mayo came down to give bulletins, each of which grew more and more ominous. Each trip they seemed to convey, in demeanor, the loss of ground in the governor's useless struggle.

TOWN IN MOURNING.

About the hospital were gathered many groups of townspeople, who could not remain in their homes so great had become their anxiety. They remained late in hope of an encouraging bulletin, but none came. When the hour became very late the groups grew smaller and smaller as the members reluctantly went to their homes.

The death of the governor will be observed here today by all of the citizens. The schools will not be opened, the stores will remain closed, while the public buildings will be abandoned. The people of Rochester, who had grown so intimate with the governor during his illness, will join the state in its deep mourning.

GOV. JOHNSON'S BATTLE, HOPELESS FROM START

Rochester, Minn., Sept. 20. — Gov. Johnson made a gallant fight for life, but it was not to be.

This state has lost one of its really good and great men, and every man, woman and child in Minnesota is today bemoaning the fate that cut Gov. Johnson off in his prime, just when his feet were on the threshold of a corridor that might have opened its way for him to the highest position in the land.

For his faithful, devoted helpmeet who has sacrificed health and jeopardized her very life that she might be with him almost every hour that he has been lying on his bed of pain, the whole nation tenders its sympathy and recognition of her great and unswerving devotion.

The people of the United States today are mourning with her.

HOPELESS BATTLE.

Almost from the first it was a hopeless fight, only the governor's remarkable will power, his determination to live, kept the vital spark alive to burn as long as it would. It was a case of death if he was not operated on at once, and the conditions proved so bad, making it necessary to keep him on the operating table so long, that only the most supreme battle against death would have availed with conditions absolutely perfect for recovery. Not many men would have survived the first shock.

Gov. Johnson had been suffering more than eight months with the present trouble, which followed an operation about seven years ago for an appendix fistula. At that time his life was despaired of for four days, but he rallied and got well.

TROUBLE BECOMES CHRONIC.

His trouble recurred and became chronic. Another fistula or abscess pocket about three inches long formed at the lower end of the secum, or connection between the large and smaller intestines lying between the right kidney duct on the right side of the abdomen and adjoining the arteries leading to the right leg. This filled and perforated into the small intestine at the lower end of the secum, its contents passing into and through the bowels in a natural way.

As the months passed this condition grew worse until an operation only would save his life, and then it is a question of aught but the great skill of the Mayos could have prevailed to keep the governor living as long as he did.

THE OPERATION.

The governor came to Rochester Tuesday evening, Sept. 14, and the operation was performed at St. Mary's hospital Wednesday forenoon, Sept. 15, lasting two hours and ten minutes. It was wholly successful, but the length of time that he was under the knife and bound by the anesthetic was so great, being three hours altogether, that the resultant shock and the fact that it was in the abdominal tract, for which reason he could be given no strengthening nourishment, combined to set the hand of fate against him.

FIRST SINKING SPELL.

Wednesday evening he had a serious sinking spell and came very near dying. In fact, at one time Dr. Charles F. McNevin, house physician at St. Mary's, who had charge of his case all the time in that capacity, could not catch his pulse, so fast and weak was it, and the governor was kept alive only by the quick use of a camphorated oil injection and hot packs.

But he did rally, and his condition Thursday and Thursday night was so good that the whole state and nation began to rejoice; even the Doctors Mayo were greatly pleased with the outlook and said then that if he continued the improvement he would survive. That was the first time that they had made so optimistic a statement.

THE LAST BATTLE.

Then came the bad attack of Friday night, when the governor again almost passed away, only the heroic work of the surgeons and his own great vitality keeping him up.

After Friday he had no more marked depressions in condition. He did not regain the point that he had reached Thursday. His physical condition was lower, his resistance much weaker.

From that time until 1:30 this afternoon, when the final decline came, the most encouraging bulletin that the Mayos would issue was, "He is just holding his own. Every hour that he lives brings him that much nearer a hopeful condition, unless he should have another decline."

FORLORN HOPE.

The whole hope of the Mayos was that he would successfully pass through the five-day crisis period, which was reached at 11 o'clock this forenoon, and then begin to mend.

The terrible ordeals of Thursday and Wednesday and Friday, however, had greatly weakened him and had taken away that essential vitality that only proper nourishment of his body could supply. This condition the Mayos well knew, but they feared to give him food because his failure to expel the accumulations of gas and the pains that ensued indicated a partial bowel paralysis; not that exactly, but the inability of the bowel muscles to respond, which would have caused a stoppage.

LIFE OR DEATH.

Yesterday morning about 1:30 they decided that nourishment was essential and tried him with champagne. His stomach could not retain it. Today it was a case of life or death, and the strained chicken broth was given him. He retained it on his stomach, but it was too late. The supreme moment had passed. The vital spark was too low. Tired nature could no longer assert itself, and Minnesota's most beloved chief executive slowly sank to his reward in the world beyond.

Not for a moment, said his physicians, was the brilliant mind obscured even during the last of his greatest ordeal.

PRESIDENT OPENS GUNNISON BORE

Taft Lets Waters Flow Into Uncompahgre Valley.

BIG PROJECT IS COMPLETED

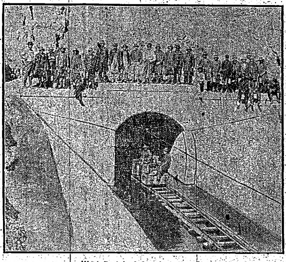
Mountain Ridge Pierced by the Government in Order to Irrigate Beautiful, But Semi-Arid Tract in Colorado.

Montrose, Col., Sept. 23.—President Taft, standing at the west portal of the great Gunnison river tunnel a little before five o'clock this afternoon, pulled a lever, and with a mighty rush the waters of the river six miles away poured into the Uncompahgre valley in a life-giving flood.

Thousands of men and women who a moment before had stood in silent awe burst forth in wild cheering, cannon which had been captured by Colorado troops in Manila roared a salute, and brass bands added their patriotic music to the clamor.

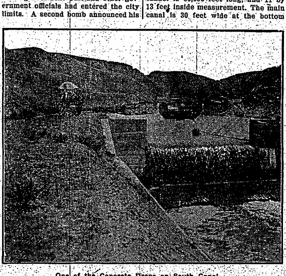
Mighty Proect Completed.

Thus was fittingly signalized the completion of the Gunnison river tunnel, the first project undertaken by the United States government reclamation service. Work on the project was begun four and a half years ago and had progressed steadily ever since. Together with its main and distributing canals the tunnel will irrigate 150,000 acres of land in a valley naturally one of the most fertile in Colorado, but which has been semiarid because of the annual summer droughts and the inadequacy of the Uncompahgre river.



West Portal of Gunnison Tunnel.

This day of the opening of the tunnel was made the chief day of the Western Slope fair, now being held here. All the morning special trains kept coming in, from various parts of the state, and at 10:30 there was a parade of the visitors. Early in the afternoon the explosion of a bomb told the people that the special train bearing President Taft and other government officials had entered the city limits. A second bomb announced his debarkation at the station, and a third was sent up as the distinguished guest, escorted by a great procession, started for Elks' park.



One of the Concrete Drops on South Canal.

President Taft Welcomed.

At the park, after introductory remarks by F. D. Catlin, chairman of the Gunnison tunnel opening committee, Mayor J. Q. Allen turned the key of the city over to the guests. Then John C. Bell delivered the formal address of welcome, to which President Taft responded briefly and happily. The exercises here concluded with remarks by Senator Charles J. Hughes and Gov. John Shafroth. At four o'clock trains started for the west portal of the tunnel, where President Taft opened the gates, and speeches were made by I. W. McConnell, consulting engineer of the reclamation service, and Senator Horace T. DeLong of Grand Junction.

After the return to Montrose there was a reception to President Taft and others, and this evening speeches were delivered by a number of well known Coloradoans, the celebration winding up with an illuminated parade and pyrotechnic display.

First of the big government reclamation projects to be undertaken, the Gunnison river tunnel has been one of the most difficult to carry through. The ample waters of the Gunnison flow through narrow valleys unsuited to agriculture or through deep, rocky canyons, while only a few miles to the west the lovely Uncompahgre valley has been suffering for water. The Gunnison, descending in ever deepening gorges, finally plunges into the Black canyon, one of the most magnificent mountain gorges in the world. This unpromising spot was selected as the starting point of the tunnel. Brave engineers lowered themselves into the Black canyon at points where the granite walls rise almost perpendicularly hundreds of feet, and after their surveys were completed active work was started on the immense project.

At great expense and under enormous difficulties, a wagon road was built to the east portal of the tunnel. It is 15 miles long, and, climbing the granite ridge between the canyon and the Uncompahgre valley, descends the rocky wall on shelf work.

Bore Built for All Time.

Simultaneously work was begun at each end of the tunnel and at a point several thousand feet from the west end, where a shaft was sunk. As fast as the tunnel was driven through the shale and solid rock, it was timbered, and then the heavy timbers were covered with impervious cement. This gives a tunnel of solid concrete built to withstand the wear of ages. All the flumes, culverts, division gates, drops and other work along the lines of the main canals are built of steel and concrete.

There is no dam across the Black canyon at the point where the river is turned into the tunnel. Instead of this, the tunnel itself taps the river from beneath its granite bed. By this plan neither floods nor slack water can prevent the tunnel taking from the river all the water needed.

Has Immnse Capacity.

A few statistics of this tremendous project are worth setting forth. The tunnel is 30,600 feet long, and 11 by 13 feet inside measurement. The main canal is 30 feet wide at the bottom and 83 feet wide at the top, and the average depth of the water is ten feet. The capacity is 1,300 cubic feet of water a second. After the water leaves the west portal of the tunnel it is conducted through 12 miles of canal to the Uncompahgre. There is a drop of 214 feet in this distance, and this great fall will be utilized for creating power. A series of concrete drops has been constructed and the immense body of water rushing over them is capable of generating at least 10,000 horse power which will be utilized in lighting the entire Uncompahgre valley by electricity.

The cost of the tunnel and distributing canals is over $5,000,000, and perpetual water rights will be sold to actual settlers at about $35 an acre.

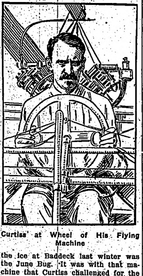
WINS FAME IN AIR

Glenn Curtiss Long Interested in Aviation.

Had Little Time to Prepare for Contest in Which He Captured International Aviation Cup—His Remarkable Biplane.

New York.—By his achievement in winning the International Aviation Cup at Rheims recently, Glenn H. Curtiss has jumped into world-wide renown in aerial circles. That his victory was a surprise even to his closest friends in this country is expressing it mildly. When Mr. Curtiss left for France on August 5 his machine had never been tried out, and he admitted that he was afraid he was taking a big chance with the limited time left him to get in condition at Rheims and try out his motor thoroughly. But after two or three days' tuning up on the field the machine performed admirably at every appearance, and when he established a world's record for speed at eight minutes 32 2-5 seconds for the circuit his American friends predicted that he would win, and he became a favorite at Rheims.

If there is one thing that Curtiss does know thoroughly it is something about motors. He was an enthusiastic motor cyclist a few years ago, and held many speed records. He has been manufacturing motor bicycles for several years at his factory in Hammondsport, N. Y. Quickly realizing the future of aerial flight, he was one of the earliest in America to devote careful attention to the manufacture of aero motors. He was invited by Prof. Alexander Graham Bell to become one of the six members of the latter's Aerial Experiment association, and with the exception of the experiments carried on at Baddeck, Nova Scotia, last winter, the greater part of their work in solving problems of aerial flight was done at Hammondsport. It was there that the four aeroplanes designed by members of the association were built and tried out. The third machine, which was the most notable previous to the long-distance flights of the Silver Dart over the ice at Baddeck last winter was the June Bug. It was with that machine that Curtiss challenged for the Scientific American cup, and won in one minute 42 seconds. He was only required to go one kilometer, .621 of a mile.



Curtiss at Wheel of His Flying Machine

When the Aerial Experiment association was disbanded last spring Mr. Curtiss directed his attention to making practical aeroplanes at Hammondsport, and the machines he has turned out embody many of the ideas gained from his work with the association.

The first machine which he completed was purchased by the Aeronautic society of New York city. Mr. Curtiss gave some creditable exhibitions with it at Morris park in July, and then transferring his flying experiments to the Hempstead plains, near Mineola, made his best flight in this country of 52 minutes 30 seconds on July 17 last, covering 29½ miles, which is now the record flight for the Scientific American cup for 1900.

Mr. Curtiss' machine which he took to Europe is practically a duplicate of the one he used here with the exception of the motor and therein lies the secret of his success. Instead of using a four-cylinder motor he built a special eight-cylinder one, water cooled. It develops 60 horse power, and weighs complete about 200 pounds. He carries a thirteen-gallon gasoline tank and a three-gallon oil tank, the fuel weighing 60 pounds. The engine develops propeller thrust of 280 pounds, against 160 pounds on the old June Bug.

His machine, a biplane, is about 30 feet wide, with a total expanse of surface of 225 feet. The total weight of the entire machine ready for flight is 700 pounds, about 100 pounds heavier than the first machine used at Mineola.

It is interesting to note that Curtiss was the second choice of the Aero Club of America. Efforts had been made to induce one of the Wright brothers to represent America, but they declined on account of other duties. Mr. Curtiss was definitely notified of his acceptance by the Aero club within six weeks of his departure to Europe.

Child a Mass of Dreadful Sore, Itching, Irritating Humor for 2 Months—Little Sufferer in Terrible Plight.

Disease Cured by Cuticura.

"My six year old daughter had the dreadful disease called hives for two months. She became affected by playing with children who had it. By scratching she caused large sores which were irritating. Her body was a complete sore but it was worse on her arms and back. We employed a physician who left medicine but it did not help her and I tried several remedies but without avail. Seeing the Cuticura Remedies advertised, I thought I would try them. I gave her a hot bath daily with Cuticura Soap and anointed her body with Cuticura Ointment. The Root of Altruism.

The three eternal roots of altruistic energy are these: First, the principle of justice; that there is a moral law before which all men are equal, so that I ought to help my neighbor to his rights. Second, the principle of charity; that I owe infinite tenderness to any shape or kind of man, however unworthy or useless to the state. Third, the principle of free will; that I can really decide to help my neighbor, and am truly disgraced if I do not do so. To this may be added the idea of a definite judgment; that is, that the action will at some time terribly matter to the helper and the helped.—G. K. Chesterton.

Its Troubles.

The family skeleton complained.

"I wouldn't mind being exhibited once in a while," said the skeleton, articulating with difficulty through its set teeth, "but they air me so frequently in the courtroom, where the air is always notoriously bad."

But who ever thinks of looking at such exhibitions from the family skeleton's point of view?

Standard Oil Walls.

The Standard Oil Company's real estate holdings in Bayonne, N. J., where its largest oil refining plant in the east is situated, have been increased from $7,360,000, the value fixed upon them in 1908 for taxation, to $13,000,000. The company is appealing against the increases fixed upon the realty by the Hudson county board of equalization.

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE

Agrees with Him About Food.

A trained nurse says: "In the practice of my profession I have found so many points in favor of Grape-Nuts food that I unhesitatingly recommend it to all my patients.

"It is delicate and pleasing to the palate (an essential in food for the sick), and can be adapted to all ages, being softened with milk or cream for babies or the aged when deficiency of teeth renders mastication impossible. For fever patients or those on liquid diet I find 'Grape-Nuts and albumen water very nourishing and refreshing.'

"This recipe is my own idea and is made as follows: Soak a teaspoonful of Grape-Nuts in a glass of water for an hour, strain and serve with the beaten white of an egg and a spoonful of fruit juice for flavouring. This affords a great deal of nourishment that even the weakest stomach can assimilate without any distress.

"My husband is a physician and he uses Grape-Nuts himself and orders it many times for his patients.

"Personally I regard a dish of Grape-Nuts with fresh or stewed fruit as the ideal breakfast for anyone—well or sick."

In any case of stomach trouble, nervous prostration or brain fag, a 10 day trial of Grape-Nuts will work wonders toward nourishing and rebuilding and in this way ending the trouble.

"There's a Reason," and trial proves. Look in pkgs. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

GHASTLY FUTURE FOR EARTH

French Scientist Predicts All Kinds of Misfortune in the Not Distant Future.

In a recent number of "l'Illustration" Abbe Th. Moreux depicts the future of our earth as a ghastly spectacle. He assumes that earthquakes have caused its surface to contract in such a fashion that in course of time it will take a shape of pyramidal form, with four faces and three summits or peaks. The faces are the great ocean basins, those of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian oceans, and one in the Arctic circle. He places the peaks in Canada, the Baltic and Siberia.

According to the Abbe, earthquake shocks number about 30,000 a year. They seem to occur with some regularity, being more numerous in winter than in spring, and more frequently happen at night than by day. As volcanic and earthquake shocks indicate the internal heat of the earth, and as terrestrial electricity is due to the sun, the abbe concludes that the earth is at the mercy of the great orb of day. According to his theory the outlook is anything but bright for our planet. Fearful earthquake throes will cause upheavals and disasters.

With regret the abbe predicts that la belle France will suffer greatly, as it lies directly in the track of likely disturbance and will practically disappear, while the British Isles will be obliterated from the face of the earth.

On Ice En Route

The driver of the ice wagon was preparing to execute one of his choicest stunts in turning corners when he was haldted by a piercing feminine shriek:

"Iceman, oh, iceman!"

He stopped with less grace than he had advanced. A woman approached.

"Do you go up to One Hundred and Fifth street," she asked, "and do you deliver ice at my house?" She gave her name and address. The ice man said that number was on his route and that he was due there in about half an hour.

"Oh, I am so glad," she said. "Will you take these things up for me? There are a steak, a salad, a quart of milk and some ice cream. I started to carry them home myself, but I have to stop at several places on the way and it is so hot the things won't be fit to eat by the time I get home with them, so if you will just put them on ice to keep cool and send them up on the dumb waiter to my flat I will be much obliged." And she handed up the parcels.

"Well, I'll be ——" said the ice man. "Has it come to this?" And then, being too much surprised to refuse his strange commission, he accepted the parcels and deposited them carefully on the most convenient chunk of ice.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Why He Looked Harrassed.

The kind lady had just handed the hungry hobo a sandwich and a hunk of pie. "Poor man!" she said sympathetically. "Are you married?" "No'm," answered the h. h. "I got dis hunted look from bein' chased from place t' place by der police."

"How children do coin words and phrases for a household," exclaimed the young mother. "When my little boy first began to talk he called every sort of opening a door. It was an association of ideas for him and he applied it to everything. One night as his father took off his shoes a hole in his stocking was disclosed. 'Funny door! funny door!' exclaimed the little chap gleefully. And now in our family a hole in the stocking is always a 'funny door.'"

Wasp Stole His Dinner.

Cornelius V. Collins, the criminologist and superintendent of New York's state prisons, narrated at a dinner some reminiscences of his interesting work. "A clever criminal of gluttonous proclivities," he said, "once couched a complaint in rather neat terms. My inspector, entering this man's cell one day, found it hot and stuffy. 'Why have you got your ventilator closed?' he asked. The burly and gluttonous prisoner answered plaintively: 'Well, inspector, yer honor, the last time I had the ventilator open a wasp flew in, you see, and carried off my dinner while my back was turned.'"

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. That tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—coaxes blood pressure away from pain centers. Its effect is charming, pleasingly delightful. Gently, though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

If you have a headache, it's blood pressure.
If it's painful periods with women, same cause.
If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets stop it in 20 minutes, and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.

Bruise your finger, and doesn't it get red, and swell, and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is—always. It's simply Common Sense.

We sell at 25 cents, and cheerfully recommend

tion. Each of these has his partisans. Some of them have powerful interests behind them. All have shown capacity for political manipulation. It is expected that the selection made will give some indications of the sources on which the Governor has made up his mind to rely for his main political strength.

Another Possible Change

There is another position close to the Governor in which a change may or may not be made. I refer to that of executive clerk. That position is now filled by a republican, Harvey Grimmer. Its duties, while confidential, are not necessarily political. The office, however, is of the highest importance and to do its work to the best advantage the incumbent must have an intimate knowledge of executive affairs and of the inner workings of the various departments of government. These Mr. Grimmer has acquired, and it would be so manifestly to the advantage of the Governor to make use of his knowledge and his experience that I should expect him to be retained. Mr. Grimmer is not onl ya very efficient but a very popular official, and his services to a Governor necessarily unfamiliar with official routine would be invaluable. Hence, as I say I question whether in this position any change will be made.

Eberhart's Ambitions.

Whether an injustice is being done him or not it is idle to overlook the fact that it is expected that in any appointments he will make the Governor will have in mind his candidacy for the nomination at the hands of the next Republican convention. It has long been known that Mr. Eberhart was a candidate for Governor. He is no less a candidate now that he ocupies the Governor's office. Indeed it is generally regarded that that fact would make him the nominee of a party which professes to be anxious to get together and forget past differences.

The Governor's Rivals

But the get-together cry was largely predicted on Governor Johnson's strength. The leaders realized that fully. They saw that as against him their cause was hopeless except under a popular leader who could unite every element in the party. But Republican leaders, even when Governor Johnson was a candidate, did not give their proper weight to some of the most important reasons for republican defection. They have never realized and do not realize now, the extent to which the present Republican leadership is discredited in the minds of the great masses of the people, regardless of party. They do not appreciate the popular dissatisfaction with Republican machine methods, and the distrust of the influences which in the past have controlled Republican conventions. Now they are laboring under the delusion that all a man has to do is to get the Republican nomination in order to sail with flying colors into the executive office against any possible nomination the Democratic party may make.

Scheming and Plotting

Hence Governor Eberhart's accession to the office has witnessed the revival of hope in the breast of candidates who heretofore had been more or less quiescent. They are far from being willing to concede to him the honor of a unanimous nomination, no matter what the character of his administration may be. Indeed no man could be more closely or more jealously watched, not in the hope that by his administration he may strengthen the party and reconcile factions, but with the more or less openly expressed wish that he may be caught tripping. It is mistakes Eberhart's rivals are looking for; not executive acts which will win popular approval. Everything that he will do will be scrutinized to find something to his discredit which they may exploit to his disadvantage. Just now it is the field against Eberhart, and in his own interest it will be necessary for him to conduct himself with the utmost circumspection.

A Democratic Administration With a Republican Figurehead

I think the Governor fully realizes the strength, the resources and the temper of those who hope to fill his shoes; and I think too that the knowledge he has that his enemies are lying in wait for him are the best presage of a popular administration. For all he has to do, to do the best he can do, is to allow the administration of public affairs, as outlined and arranged for by Governor Johnson to take its course. He must realize that as the polinticians are watching him the people are watching him too, and that they will be as ready to condemn any overt act which can be construed into discrediting the administration of Governor Johnson, and make capital for the Republican party, as Republican leaders would be ready to encourage it. If he follows a negative course his path will be comparatively smooth; any other he will find beset with thorns.

Governor Johnson a Great Party Leader

No greater compliment could be paid to Governor Johnson's genius for leadership to his capacity for organization, and to his devotion to the public interest than is furnished by the fact that, although he is no longer here to direct, the inspiration of his leadership is evidenced in the executive machine he planned, and that the people will be best served if it is permitted to pursue unhampered the course he outlined. In this honor his subordinates are entitled to share and for the effectiveness of every department of state the Democratic Party which endorsed and upheld him is entitled to credit. The success of the late administration has demonstrated among other things to the people of the state that Democratic officials may safely be entrusted even in his absence to manage in the public interest the various departments of the state government. The party which made this possible is not without leaders with qualifications to resume the reins of government, tho as I before indicated, Republican leaders choose to ignore this fact, and are preparing for just such another factional fight as caused the disruption which made Governor Johnson's first election possible.

A Keen Struggle

For it is already plain that there is to be again a keen if not a bitter contest for the Republican nomination. The friends of the various candidates are already at work. Prominent among these candidates, backed by a formidable organization and having the co-operation of followers in all parts of the state devoted to his cause is R. C. Dunn of Princeton. These will never be satisfied until the opportunity is again afforded him to test his strength. Ripley Brower is known to be in the field and is the favorite here of the local organization. The friends of J. F. Jacobson believe that his defeat last time was due to treachery, and will insist on his being a candidate, possibly on a new platform. William E. Lee is being groomed for the position. John Furlong of Austin is ambitious, and it is believed will have the support of the Tawney machine. S. G. Iverson also from the first district has long been known to entertain the hope of reaching the executive chair, and there are others.

Reform Republicans

Nor should the fact be overlooked that there are within the Republican party those who are fond of speaking of themselves as the reform element, who look to a new leadership and the raising of new issues. They will appeal to the people rather than to present recognized leaders whom they entertain hopes of being able to unhorse. These are likely to concentrate their forces on E. T. Young. The sentiment of reform they appeal to cannot safely be ignored. It is easily within the bounds of possibility that the temperance sentiment of the state will be tested on the question of county option. The question of the tonnage tax will certainly cut some figure. A protest will be voiced against the influence exercised in the organization by the railroads and other corporations and by the liquor interests. Altogether it is already apparent that the Republicans are making preparations for all kinds of internal strife, and he would be a rash man who thus early in the game ventured to predict the outcome.

CO-OPERATIVE COW TESTING ASSOCIATION

Systematic Work Increase the Value of the Dairy Herd.

Information on Subject from the Minnesota Farmers' Institute.

The first co-operative cow testing association was organized Jan. 23, 1895 in Denmark for the purpose of investigating and recording the feeding, as well as the milk and butter fat yields, of the individual cows in the herds.

This association has been so successful that today, instead of a few associations with a few cows, there are more than 450 associations with over 170,000 cows. The average yield per cow has been increased from 5,451 pounds of milk, averaging 3.3 per cent butter fat, to 7,776 pounds of milk, averaging 3.52 per cent butter fat.

Minnesota dairymen need not be ashamed to imitate in so good a cause. The average yield of the Minnesota cow is approximately 4000 pounds milk and 156 pounds butter fat, while the writer has records of several cows whose milk yield for the past year was below 2000 pounds and several that exceeded 7000 pounds. If a dairyman wishes to improve the productiveness of his herd, there is only one way of doing it, provided they are properly fed and cared for, namely: to weed out poor producers and replace them with profitable ones. Such cows, however, are rarely found on the market except at very high prices, and the average dairyman will find that, if he wants good cows, he must raise them himself. The most economical method he can adopt then is to purchase a sire of pronounced dairy qualities and raise the calves from his best cows and with them replace the cows that prove unprofitable.

But in order to do this, he must be able to tell the good cows from the poor ones. He must know three things about each individual. First, how much milk she will give in a year not in a month, because she must be fed a year. Second he must know the richness of the milk. Third, he must know how much it costs to keep the cow a year.

The simplest method of obtaining these facts is for a few farmers in a community with a sufficient number of cows to organize and hire a competent man to do the testing. The expense to be paid pro rata by each man in proportion to the number of cows he owns. It is desirable to have a sufficient number of cows in the association so that the expense will not exceed $1.00 to $1.50 per cow per year. The tester visits one herd a day. He arrives in the afternoon, sees the cows milked, weighs the milk and takes a sample from each cow. This is repeated next morning. He tests the milk from each cow and figures out the value of the butter fat and a suitable ration and leaves these with the farmer. This farmer then takes the tester and his outfit to the next farmer. He gets to each farm every month, so that the farmer has monthly records. At the end of the year, the tester figures up the yield of milk and butter fat and the value of the same, the cost of feed to maintain a cow each year and the profit or loss on each individual in the herd, and furnishes every patron with this record.

One of the greatest values of testing cows for the first year at least is that it gives the facts needed to feed intelligently. Only when cows are in good condition and properly fed can they do work up to their capacity. When they have been in good condition and well fed for a year, their records as shown by the test will enable one to cull out the unprofitable cows.

AFTER SUFFERING TEN YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MARLTON, N.J.—I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given me new life. I suffered for ten years with serious female troubles, inflammation, ulceration, indigestion, nervousness, and could not sleep. Doctors gave me up, as they said my troubles were chronic. I was in despair, and did not care whether I lived or died, when I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so I began to take it, and am well again and relieved of all my suffering."—Mrs. GEORGE JORDY, Box 40, Marlton, N.J.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

"Is that so?" asked Nelson. "How long?"

"Yes, I fooled 'em 13 years," replied "Cap."

"How is that?" asked Nelson.

"Oh," said "Cap.," "I quit when teachers had to qualify."—Kansas City Journal.

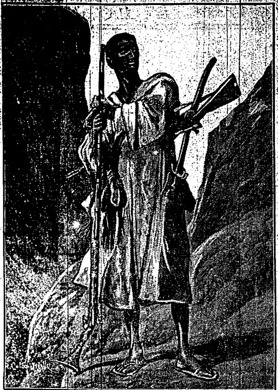
SPAIN'S REDOUBTABLE FOE



The Riffian warrior carries two guns—a flintlock for ordinary shooting at short range and for the killing of small game and birds, and a Mauser, his greatest treasure, for use in warfare and for long-distance shooting. The Riffian is, as a rule, an excellent shot, and he values his ammunition more than does the ordinary man, for it is both rare and expensive. The majority of the Riffians are tall, powerful men, with a remarkable range of vision, a fierce temper, but a fine point of honor. For many years they were great pirates, but they gave up piracy at the request of the late Sir John Drummond-Hay, the British minister of the Moorish court, who went boldly into the country of the offending tribe and extracted from them a promise to leave ships alone in future. The Riffians claim respect and are extremely likely to enforce it. They have a great reputation as fighting men, and it is said that any man who shows the white feather runs every risk of being killed by his womenfolk.

TO LIVE A CENTURY

Inmate of English Infirmary Enters Her Hundredth Year.

Happy, Active Old Lady Says Secret Is to Just Keep on Living—Hugely Enjoys Sunshine and Fresh Air.

London.—There have been scenes of subdued revelry at Crowdon infirmary recently, for Mrs. Harriet Belton, one of the inmates, entered on her hundredth year and the nurse gave a party in her ward in honor of the event.

All the staff seem to feel that she has conferred fame and honor on the union by spending the long evening of her days there, and a reporter who called to see her was told by the smiling matron: "Certainly you can see 'Granny.' She's in No. 6 ward, upstairs."

But when the fine days come no ward can hold this active, happy old woman, and she was found basking in the sun on the bridge corridor that joins two blocks of the infirmary.

"Tell you how to live to be a hundred?" she replied to the first question. "Why, the chief thing is just to go on living. That's how I've done it. I never had to work too hard, and I always liked sunshine, fresh air, and plenty of company.

"I was a girl of five when Waterloo was fought. I can remember my mother's two brothers going off to the wars, and I remember how I wanted to go with them."

The old woman's pride seems to be her son. She would talk of little but her "boy"—a boy of about 73—of how well he was doing, and of how she would like him to come and see her. "As for grandchildren and great-grandchildren, I don't know how many I've got," she said. "I only know that when we all gathered together at my son's last Christmas twelvemonth the room was crowded with them—more than I could count."

Deafness is almost the old woman's only defect. She still reads without glasses, being a constant student of her Bible and taking an interest in newspapers. As the uncrowned queen of the infirmary she is granted some little indulgences by the devoted staff. It is, perhaps, the best testimony to her well being that she is still able to have strong opinions on the subject of food. And if you ask her what most impressed her at the birthday party she will talk in glowing terms of the rum punch the nurses brewed in her honor.

She was born in Brockham, near Dorking in 1810, but has lived in Croydon for the last 20 years.

ST. BERNARD WEIGHS 230 LBS

Monster Maine Canine Is Only Nineteen Months, But Is Still Rapidly Growing.

Portland, Me.—The claim of being the largest St. Bernard dog in New England, for his age, is made for Carl A. Jordan's great dog Major, which at 19 months of age weighs 230 pounds and is still growing. Major has won several blue ribbons. Some idea of his weight may be gained by the following table: At six weeks old, 17 pounds; at ten months, 174 pounds; at 11 months, 184 pounds; at 12 months, 198 pounds; at 16 months, 222 pounds; at 19 months, 230 pounds. The dog is a full-blooded St. Bernard. His sire was Nero, from West Baldwin, and his mother was a full-blooded animal from the Springfield (Mass.) kennels.

FARMERS ON CENSUS

Queries and All Kinds of Advice Sent to National Bureau.

Officials Invite Co-operation and Make Arrangements to Consult Many Experts of Country as to Methods.

Washington.—The farmers of the United States are naturally very much interested in the census of agriculture and farms that will be taken April 15, 1910, as one of the subjects to be covered by the thirteenth decennial census. Many are showing their interest by writing to the census bureau for the purpose of making comments on census information regarding agriculture as presented in the past.

The director of the census welcomes all such suggestions, and gives them careful consideration, as he is anxious to have the results of the coming census correspond as nearly as may be to the desires of the people most interested.

In addition to studying carefully these suggestions, the director has on his own initiative requested certain professors of economics and agriculture of the more important universities of the country, and other persons who have specialized in agricultural matters, to come to Washington for a short time for the purpose of studying carefully and criticising plans now under way.

Especially, is it desired to obtain their opinion relative to the questions to be asked, and their form, as the results to be obtained will so largely depend on the character of the schedule and the manner in which the questions are propounded.

These suggestions, coming from outside experts, are proving to be of great value, and it is believed that in consequence of this preliminary study more valuable and accurate data will be obtained than could otherwise be secured.

After these special students and experts have made their preliminary studies, formal conferences are held in the office in which the whole matter of the character of the schedules and the best methods of securing the information are thoroughly gone over.

The department is also seeking to secure the advice and co-operation, as far as possible, of the officers and experts of the department of agriculture, of the state agricultural colleges, farmers' societies and like organizations.

"WIMEN" SCARCE IN IDAHO

Carpenter Out There Would Like to Have Chicago Widow or "Old Made" for Bride.

Chicago.—Upon the already heavily-laden shoulders of the Chicago police department a simple, big-hearted westerner has placed another burden—the task of finding a winsome widow or old "made" for the lonesome westerner—a carpenter in mountainous Idaho.

As Capt. Wood of the detective bureau glanced at the mail on his desk, his curiosity was attracted to the plain scrawl of a letter bearing the postmark "Mace, Idaho." On opening the letter he read:

"Chief of Police, Chicago, Ill: If you know of some good woman ether a widow or old made about the age of 35 to 45 years that would like a carpenter for a husband give her my name and adress as wimen is scarce out here and Oblige,

"W. W. GREEN, Mace, Idaho."

FRICK'S WISH COST $750

Pittsburg Steel Man Tires of Turning Crank to Get "Central," Secures Latest Model.

Pride's Crossing, Mass.—That money talks is an old adage that may well be aplied to the efforts of Mr. Henry Clay Frick of Pittsburg to get better telephone facilities. Mr. Frick has the most beautiful summer palace on the whole north shore. For many weeks of the summer season he contents himself with spending only the week ends with his family at Eagle Rock, as his place is called, and he comes on from New York usually on Friday nights in his private car, returning to business Monday. During the hottest part of the season, when he lives here all the time, he is in daily communication with his New York office by telephone.

Mr. Frick, like all other subscribers along the north shore, when he wants to use his telephone must ring "central" by turning a little crank, as the more up-to-date method of signaling central by simply lifting the telephone receiver from its hook has not yet been installed in the small towns along the shore. This ringing the bell proved too arduous a task for Mr. Frick, it appears, and he made an application to the telephone company for the more up-to-date device. He was told that the only way he could get the service he wanted was to have his 'phone connected with Beverly.

Beverly is only four miles away from the Frick mansion, and only eight miles of wire had to be stretched between the Beverly exchange and the Frick mansion, at a cost of only a few hundred dollars, to comply with Mr. Frick's desire. A small army of telephone employes was set to work and when Mr. Frick returned home from a game of golf at the Myopia golf links and called up his New York office he didn't have to exert himself by turning the crank. He simply lifted his receiver from its hook and "central" answered promptly. It cost only $750 to do it.

Witnessed Charge at Balkalava.

Toledo, O.—Joseph Bier, 80 years old, killed the other night by being struck by a train, was a veteran of the Crimean war and fought in the battle of Balaklava, being a witness of the "Charge of the Light Brigade." For years the aged man has earned a precarious living here by making wooden shoes.

Japan Rice Crop Large.

Tokyo.—The first day of September, looked upon as the end of the critical stage for the rice plants, as passed favorably and it is predicted that the rice crop of Japan this year will exceed 50,000,000 koku (nearly 250,000,000 bushels).

Prices Rise on U. S. Crops

Farmers Get More Money for All Leading Products This Year Except That of Corn.

Washington.—Corn is the only crop that is not bringing the American farmer more money to the bushel in 1909 than it did in 1908. The price of corn is sky-high at that, for its farm value was 75.2 cents a bushel August 1 of this year, as against 78.1 cents a bushel August 1, 1908, the latter being at least 15 cents above normal value.

The farm value of wheat is 16.7 cents higher for 1909 than it was for 1908. Oats are 0.8 cent a bushel this year over last. Barley is 3.1 cents dearer this year than in 1908. Rye has advanced 4.1 cents over last year. Buckwheat is 2.8 cents and flaxseed 29.6 cents over a year ago.

Potatoes participate in the rise in value occasioned by the 1908 season of shortage in the crops generally. Hay is worth 46 cents more per ton than it was a year ago. Cotton to-day has a farm value of five dollars a bale more to the farmer than it did August 1 of last year, and of $13 a bale more than it did a few months ago.

The foregoing figures are the actual farm value of the products in question, not the artificial values as reflected in the reports of grain, cotton and produce exchanges.

Rooster Walks Like Man.

Greenburg, Ind.—Another mollycoddle story has come to light. John Townsend, living east of St. Paul, has a rooster that as a freak has anything in the chicken line beat to date. The rooster, which is now past two years of age, walks erect like a human, instead of chicken fashion.

It goes strutting about the barnyard with its breast stuck out, its tail hanging down and its head high in the air, and apparently enjoys being the only one of the flock that has to be looked up to. Mr. Townsend says the rooster was deformed when hatched.

Girl Builds Airship.

New York.—Miss F. L. Todd of Staten Island has constructed an aeroplane which she thinks will be superior to any which won prizes last week in France. She has equipped it with a 50-horse power automobile engine and is seeking suitable grounds on which to test it. The apparatus is a biplane with a spread of 43 feet and measures 6½ feet from back to front.

NEW STRENGTH FOR WOMEN'S BACKS.

How to Make a Bad Back Better.

Women who suffer with backache, bearing down pains, dizzy spells and that constant feeling of dullness and tiredness, will find hope in the advice of Mrs. Mary Hinson of 21 Strother St., Mt. Sterling, Ky. "Had I not used Doan's Kidney Pills, I believe I would not be living today," says Mrs. Hinson. "My eyesight was poor, I suffered with nervous, splitting headaches, spots would dance before my eyes and at times I would be so dizzy I would have to grasp something for support. My back was so weak and painful I could hardly bend over to button my shoes and could not get around without suffering severely. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me from the first, and I continued until practically well again."

From Overhead.

A canary hung directly over the big square table in the Hungarian restaurant.

"Once," said a woman who was dining there, "the bottom dropped out of the cage, the bird flew at the orchestra yonder, and we had bird seed in our soup. It was awful!"

"That reminds me," said the cross-eyed man, "of one time when we were having a little game of poker on the B. & O. You know how those trains roll. Well, just about the middle of the game down came all the grips and dress suit cases straight into the kitty and broke up the game. Money flew everywhere. We got so mixed we couldn't tell which had won or where the money was that whoever had won it won. Talk about bird seed!"

FALL PAINTING.

The majority of property owners are under the impression that spring time is the only painting time. But the fall of the year offers several advantages to the painter. One of the most important is that surfaces are almost sure to be dry, and there is no frost or inner moisture to work out after the paint is applied.

Pure white lead—the Dutch Boy Painter kind—mixed with pure linseed oil (tinted as desired) gives a winter coat to a building that is an armor against the severest attacks of the winter rain, sleet, winds and snow.

His Size Was Known.

"I want some collars and neckties for my husband!" she snapped.

"Yes, madam."

The clerk offered her the latest thing.

"What size are these?" asked the lady.

"Why, twelve and a half, madam!"

"How on earth did you guess that?"

"Ah," replied the clerk, smiling, "gentlemen who let their wives select their collars and ties always take that size!"

A New One About Napoleon.

A "new" story about Napoleon is necessarily doubtful; the probability is that it is simply so old that it has been forgotten. However, here is one that Arthur M. Chuquet prints in L'Opinion as never before published. It relates to Napoleon and Bluecher.

The emperor received the general at the castle of Finkenstein, while he was preparing for the siege of Danzig. He drew him to a window in an upper story and paid him compliments on his military gifts, and Bluecher, going away delighted, described the interview to his aide-de-camp. "What a chance you missed!" exclaimed the latter.

"You might have changed the whole course of history."

"How?"

"Why, you might have thrown him out of the window!"

"Confound it!" replied Bluecher. "So I might! If only I had thought of it."—New York Evening Post.

Where Sitting Bull Was.

Doane Robinson, head of the department of history for the state of South Dakota, says of Sitting Bull and the Custer massacre: "The Indians tell me that Sitting Bull was a medicine chief; that he was the greatest influence among the Sioux at that time by reason of his constant agitation against the whites, and that he did not personally engage in the fight against Custer, but that he was back on an elevation between the Little Big Horn and the Big Horn making medicine."—Indian School Journal.

Sheer white goods, in fact, any fine wash goods when new, owe much of their attractiveness to the way they are laundered, this being done in a manner to enhance their textile beauty. Home laundering would be equally satisfactory if proper attention was given to starching, the first essential being good Starch, which has sufficient strength to stiffen, without thickening the goods. Try Defiance Starch and you will be pleasantly surprised at the improved appearance of your work.

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

WILL BE SOME TOWN

Plummer People Think New Raiload Will Help the Town.

The crew of Soo surveyors that arrived here last week augmented by the arrival of four new men and now numbering sixteen are at work running a line southeast from here. The crew is in charge of Sid Jones who had charge of a crew on the wheat line survey four years ago. The crew will make this their head quarters until the first of the week when they will move to the crossing at Lost River.

While the present survey is supposed to be only a preliminary one yet it is very likely that the line will be built on the route they lay out. The line as it is now being run leaves the right-of-way about three quarters of a mile south of town and running in a south-easterly direction crosses the P. Medchell and O. Guthier farms entering the town of Garnes at section eighteen. From there the line keeps the same general direction and will very likely cross Lost River in section six of Hill River Township.

That this is going to make Plummer SOME TOWN there is no doubt and seeing that Thief River Falls and Red Lake Falls cannot agree on the county seat question we might as well lo it here and put a stop to all this scrapping.—Plummer Pioneer.

It Takes a $200,000 Plant
To Make "Gitche Gamee" Shoes

With a much smaller expenditure we could make a GOOD Shoe, but we are not satisfied with making merely a good shoe, WE MAKE THE BEST SHOE IT IS POSSIBLE TO MAKE—and that takes a big plant and a good plant.

THE MEN WHO MAKE THE "GITCHE GAMEE" are the best leather-workers that can be found in any shoe factory in the country. We know that THAT is the most important of all the many points that go to the making of good shoes. A poor workman cannot make a good shoe even out of the best materials, while a good workman will not attempt to make a good shoe out of anything else—it would damage his reputation for work of superior excellence.

THE LEATHER USED IN "GITCHE GAMEES" is the best that we can purchase; we use sole leather throughout for heels, soles, counters and toe-boxes, because of its greater wearing qualities "GITCHE GAMEES" are made of ALL LEATHER, no shoddy excuses find a place in the factory of the Northern Shoe company.

THE APPLIANCES USED IN MAKING "GITCHE GAMEES" are the most modern and up-to-date. Even the best of workmen can only do their best work with the best tools, and we want our workmen's best work.

TO SUM UP—The most highly skilled workmen, the best leather obtainable and the most modern tools and machinery. THESE ARE THE THREE THINGS THAT MAKE THE "GITCHE GAMEE."

"GITCHE GAMEES" cost $4.00—get a pair from your local dealer and let them prove our claims ON YOUR FEET—that's the only way to thoroughly satisfy yourself.

The same high standard of quality will be found in every shoe of "NOSHCO-MAKE." When you purchase any of these shoes you get the BEST shoe of the kind that it is possible to make—

NETWORK OF DITCHES

Twenty-five Miles of County Ditches in Towns of Star and Highlanding.

At a meeting of the county commissioners held Tuesday four ditch petitions were considered. If all of the ditches asked for in these petitions are constructed they will make a net work of drainage ditches in the towns of Star and Highlanding that will drain practically all of the low lands in those two towns. Though there are several petitions it is all one drainage scheme that has for its purpose the construction of about twenty-five miles of ditches in the two towns.

County Surveyor C. H. Martz was authorized to make a survey of the roposed routes of the ditches and viewers were appointed to appraise the work to determine the amount of benefits that should be assessed and damages awarded in case the construction work is undertaken. It is believed that the engineer's and viewers' reports will be favorable and that the ditches will be established.

A large number of farmers interested in the proposed work were in town Tuesday and they were given a hearing before the commissioners. There was no objection to the establishment of the ditches, the farmers being here to express their desires as to along what lines they wish the ditches constructed.

FIRE AT McINTOSH.

There was a hundred thousand dollar fire at McIntosh Tuesday afternoon. Shortly after one o'clock fire was discovered in the big two story brick department store of Carpenter & Webster, destroying the building and stock completely, burned the adjoining general store of Mr. Mathews completely and was stopped by the brick building of the Citizens' State bank across the street to the south, though the windows of the bank building were all destroyed by the heat, the roof damaged by fire and the interior flooded by water, causing a heavy loss though the money and papers were not damaged.

The building of Carpenter & Webster was a fine two story brick tructure valued at about $15,000 and is a total loss, together with a stock of general merchandise, furniture, hardware and machinery estimated at $75,000, half covered by insurance.

The Mathews general store, located on the corner just south of the Carpenter & Webster store, was next destroyed. It was 40x80, a frame building covered with sheet iron. Nothing was saved. The loss on building and contents is estimated at $25,000, about half covered by insurance.

There was a heavy wind and the destruction of the whole business section of the village was threatened and it was not until the firemen had fought the flames for several hours that the fire was under control.

The formal opening of the Red Lake Falls Supply House will occur on Saturday morning. Max Ingber, the proprietor, has been busy for several days and expects to have his stock all in order before Saturday. He advertises a ten days opening sale, commencing on Saturday. Read the ad.

A Skeleton In Every Closet.

The expression "There is a skeleton in every closet" is said to have its origin in the fact that a soldier once wrote to his mother, who complained of her unhappiness, to have some sewing done for him by some one who had no cares or troubles. At last the mother found a woman who seemed to have no troubles, but when she told her business the woman took her to a closet containing a skeleton and said: "Madam, I try to keep my troubles to myself, but every night I am compelled by my husband to kiss this skeleton, who was once his rival. Think you, then, I can be happy?"

Alphabetical Time.

An English firm, Higgins & Dodd, finding that there were twelve letters in their name, placed a great clock over their door with the letters on its face instead of numerals.

They waited anxiously for days, weeks, hoping for some return, but not a soul took notice of the clock. At last, amid excitement behind the office window, a man was seen to halt in the street and gaze at the clock, puzzled.

Slowly he came to the door, entered and drawled, "Say, is it half past Higgins or a quarter to Dodd?"—T. P.'s Weekly.

ROBERT ADAM.

He Created a New Era In English Architecture.

Robert Adam (1728-92) was to English architecture what Benvenuto Cellini was to that of Italy. He was architect to the king, beloved at court, a member of parliament, and it was said of him that he "could not help adorning all that he touched." Those of the English people who dwell in Adam houses prize them as rare jewels.

Adam introduced into English architecture a lightness, delicacy of touch and charm of proportion which it had never before possessed and which gave his name to that splendid period of architecture the style of which lasted over a century. Everything in a house, from the panel in a ceiling to the vases and gilt wood tripods and branches for lights, from hangings at the windows to a woman's hairpin holder, Adam designed himself.

Adam got his rich, beautiful and distinctive style from the ruins of the Emperor Diocletian, at Spalato. As a finish to interiors he conceived the idea of using figures in relief upon walls, colored and adorned according to Raphael's Stanze painted flat upon the walls of the Vatican. His idea was as bold as its result was beautiful. He also adopted Pompeiian styles of decoration.

"Adam was artist as well as architect, and his walls, ceilings and interior adornments are marvels of harmonious colors," says an architect. "He employed no less personages than Angelica Kaufman and Zucchi to paint many of the panels and medallions let into his ceilings, and it was his habit to have carpets woven to match the pattern overhead and harmonize with the color there employed. The keynote of Adam's style is 'movement,' combined with perfect artistic fitness, and it is peculiar for its grace and stateliness."—New York Tribune.

ziabad, he again saw a snake emerging from the water with a fish in its mouth. This snake was about twenty-four inches long, and on killing it he was able to identify the fish as a common species of Indian fresh water fish. Later on he saw a viper, nearly four feet long, lying in shallow water. The writer hooked it ashore with his tackle, upon which the snake attacked him, leaving a large yellow fang in his fishing rod.

EDWARD BROUILLETT SERIOUSLY INJURED

Right Arm Broken in Five but Amputation is Not Necessary.

Edward Brouillett, a brother of Frank Brouillett, of this city, and a former resident of Red Lake Falls and well known here, was seriously injured at Crookston at about 5 o'clock last Thursday afternoon. Mr Brouillett is grain man for the Crookston Milling company. The elevator of which he had charge became clogged and he went to the cupalo to remedy the trouble when the accident occurred.

Frank Brouillett went to Crookston Friday morning and remained with his brother until Sunday. He says that reports of the accident published in the dailies were greatly exaggerated. There is no danger of the accident proving fatal.

When Brouillett went to the cupalo of the elevator one of the elevator men who had a curiosity to see what was the matter with the machinery followed. When he got to the top of the ladder he found that Brouillett was held fast in the machinery. In some unknown manner his right arm was caught by a belt and was wrapped around the shaft. The machinery was stopped quickly, the belt lacing cut and the injured man was released. Though seriously hurt, he descended to the ground and walked to the office, being later taken to a hospital for treatment. His right arm is so badly injured that it will require careful treatment to prevent the necessity of amputation. However, he is making excellent progress, and it is thought that amputation will not be necessary. There are two fractures above the elbow, another fracture just below the joint and a compound fracture lower down. As a result of other injuries two fingers of the left hand were amputated at the first joint.

LOST A GOOD GAME

Local High School Foot Ball Team Dropped One To Fosston.

The first foot ball game of the season for the Red Lake Falls high school team was played at Fosston last Saturday. It was a fine game and the local boys think they could have pulled out a victory if there had been about "three halves."

It was the first game of the season and the first game in the experience of some of the players. This was especially true of Red Lake's pony line. The line was very light, most of the more experienced and heavier players being needed to pull of the plays in the back field. On the contrary, Fosston had a heavy line and it made a very "formidable front.

During the first few minutes of play it was very much Fosston and in a short time a touchdown had been pushed over. However, it took longer to get the second one and the game became interesting Red Lake Falls pulled off some good plays and made some good gains, but bad fumbles cost much. It can be said that Fosston made more gains on the fumbling of their opponents than on their own plays. Before the end of the first half Fosston got a second touchdown and kicked goal.

With the score 12 to 0 against them, the Red Lake Falls boys went into the second half to win. An accident gave Fosston six more points. A forward pass by Fosston was missed but the ball had been touched by a Red Lake player. That made it anyone's ball though the pass had failed and a Fosston man walked over the line for another touchdown. Eighteen to nothing did not discourage the Red Lake Falls boys and they began to do things. Garceau got away for a sixty-five yard run, the feature of the game, and got a touchdown. "Buck" Zaiser kicked goal. From then on it looked like a victory for Red Lake Falls if time would allow. The ball was kept in Fosston territory all of the time and was pushed over for a second touchdown. After a little scrimmage, time was called with the score 18 to 11 in favor of Fosston. However, the locals are very well pleased with the game. It was their first game while Fosston had been up against the fast Bemidji team, playing them off their feet in the second half. That they could turn the same trick on Fosston when the first half was so discouraging is gratifying. The boys expect to take the return game from Fosston and to be in the race for the valley championship.

The members of the team and the small band of Red Lake Falls rooters were pleased with the work of the officials and the hospitality of the Fosston people.

The locals will play Thief River Falls here one week from Saturday, Oct. 16. Crookston defeated Thief River Falls last Saturday, 7 to 5.

ECKSTEIN--SMITH.

Former Wylie Young Man is Married.

William Eckstine one of the most popular young men in the city returned last evening from Wadena. William did not return alone—in fact he was accompanied by a most estimable young lady whom he presented to his friends as "Mrs. Eckstine." Mr. Eckstine was married on September 7, at Wadena, to Miss Nellie Smith of Verndale, the wedding being a very pleasant affair. After the performance of the marriage ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Eckstine visited at Red Lake Falls, Crookston and other points in the Red River Valley, where they both have a large number of friends. Sincere congratulations are being extended to Mr. and Mrs. Eckstine.—Bemidji Daily Pioneer. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Nick Eckstine of Wylie and he and his bride were in Red Lake Falls recently while en route to Wylie. Mr. Eckstine has many friends in Red Lake county who are glad of the opportunity to offer congratulations and best wishes. The young people will reside at Bemidji where Mr. Eckstine is employed by the Northern Pacific railroad.

PAUL PRY'S GOSSIPY COMMENT

Ralph Wheelock Private Secretary—Mitchell Narrow Escape for Gov. Eberhart.

Some Interesting Political Developments May be Expected Soon.

[Special correspondence to Red Lake Falls Gazette.]

St. Paul, Oct. 5—Governor Eberhart is evidently in earnest in the opinion to which he has given expression that the executive office should be absolutely divorced from politics. At all events it would appear so from the character of the private secretary he has appointed. Ralph W. Wheelock, whom he has selected for that office, isn't a politician in the sense of being a leader capable of taking the initiative in matters of public policy. He has no political following. His character is not such as has led prominent men to look to him for counsel as to the best course to pursue on questions of state. Neither has he the reputation of a man capable of organizing a party into a working force. He is neither aggressive nor resourceful. Neither his talents, his character, his antecedents nor his associations are those of a man accustomed to take a prominent part in public affairs.

A Model Young Man

Governor Eberhart wasn't looking for that kind of a man. He wanted a private secretary—not a political manager. He wanted someone intelligent enough to be safely entrusted to attend to his correspondence who would be loyal to him and not betray his confidence or divulge official secrets, who had a pleasing presence, would receive visitors courteously, and would faithfully carry out his instructions, and be satisfied to do that and nothing more. Mr. Wheelock is evidently qualified to undertake such tasks. There is no reason to believe that he will not make a model private secretary.

The Governor's Narrow Escape

They say the job was offered to Charley Mitchell. I don't know whether it was or not. If it was the governor had a narrow escape if he wanted to divorce his office from politics. For no two men could be more unlike than Charley Mitchell and Ralph Wheelock. Wheelock is naturally conservative. Mitchell is radical. Wheelock is reticent giving expression to his views. Mitchell has always an opinion on tap on every conceivable subject. Wheelock is no fighter. Mitchell is aggressive to a fault. He likes to be busy. He wants to lead—not to follow. Unlike Wheelock he knows politics from the inside, possesses powers of initiative in a marked degree, and would like nothing better than to be intrusted to organize a machine and to run it. If he were the governor's private secretary and assigned the duties which in Minnesota a private secretary has long been accustomed to discharge, the governor's office would be political headquarters, and its patronage, favors and emoluments would be so distributed as in his opinion would bring strength to the administration and result in increasing its adherents and organizing them into a strong and effective working force. Mitchell has not that breadth of grasp, that wide view or that faculty for conciliation which mark the real leader of a great party such as Johnson was. Like Wheelock he has his limitations. But he is at least enough of a leader to organize a faction and to create a machine, and that is what he would have tried to do, and I am inclined to think that, with all the will in the world, Eberhart could not have prevented his doing it. So I say Eberhart is fortunate if, as intimated, Mitchell declined to associate himself with his administration, provided of course the governor has already set his fact against playing politics.

What People are Saying

There are those who profess to see in Wheelock's appointment a desire to conciliate the Collins faction and a slight to the Dunn adherents, and in support of this it is pointed out that Wheelock was recommended by Judge Collins and Mr. Torrence. There are also those who see in the appointment evidence of a desire to conciliate the temperance people, basing this on the fact that Wheelock was secretary to Mayor Jones the glory of whose administration was the imposition of the lid on Minneapolis. On the other hand it is known that the appointment is quite satisfactory to Ed Smith and Dar Reese, who had opportunity of sizing up Wheelock from their association with him during the Jacobson campaign. However, the probability is that Wheelock's appointment is regarded by all the factions as innocous and giving none the advantage. The indications are that they have taken Eberhart at his word and that they expect the executive office will not be the scene of political manipulations, and that whatever combinations are formed will be made elsewhere than in the governor's office and through agencies than those found in the governor's entourage.

An Orphan Reclaimed

As indicating the governor's real desire to divorce the executive office from politics his offer to continue Harvey Grimmer in the office of executive clerk is of interest. He could hardly have expected to win over to his cause so loyal and trusted a friend of Governor Johnson and so ardent a supporter of his party as Mr. Grimmer. Like everyone else the governor was familiar with his affiliations. No doubt he offered Grimmer the office in good faith anticipating that his party predilections would in no way interfere with the faithful discharge of his routine duties. Grimmer at first was inclined to take the same view and place his services at the governor's disposal. In time however he came to see it would not do, and that the situation created was impossible. In the nature of things the governor and the governor's friends could not be expected to give him that full confidence to which he had grown accustomed under the Johnson administration. On the other hand the Democratic leaders felt, and no doubt showed it, that the same intimate relations could not exist between them and Governor Eberhart's confidential clerk as marked the intercourse between them and confidential clerk of their party chief. Mr. Grimmer early saw that he was in a fair way of becoming a political orphan with an unsympathizing guardian and a suspicious foster parent. He wisely solved the difficulty by gratefully declining the tempting offer.

A Political Penny Parlor

This left another place for the governor to fill. It is not known who will succeed Mr. Grimmer. Perhaps Jimmy Matchitt. Possibly some personal friend of the governor. Certainly some one who w'll be in sympathy with the governor's policy of divorcing the executive office from that politics which he has tabooed. We may even hope in time that public affairs will be conducted with that tender regard for the public interest which is exhibited at the headquarters of a business corporation.

Still They Talk Politics

In the meantime the people I meet are talking politics and thinking about politics a good deal more than is usually the case at this time of year. They are not thinking merely of the men who will be candidates for office, but of what principles they hold, what views they have on public questions, even of what interests they represent, especially those who are candidates for governor. Perhaps this is all wrong, and the people have no right to know. I even expect that in time they will become inquisitive about Governor Eberhart's affiliations and will want to know what his attitude would be on some other things besides making appointments, signing papers, and discharging the routine duties of the executive office. It is hoped that he will be quite as ready to give as full and candid an expression to his views on other subjects as he was to elaborate a plan for the extension of agricultural education.

(Order Forming School District.)

A Waiting Game

Still the public attitude is one of waiting. The people are willing enough to give Governor Eberhart ample time to develop his policy, if he has any. They want him to have a fair trial. They are even predisposed in his favor and heartily approve of his intention to administer the office along the lines laid down by Governor Johnson. Other candidates, for although Governor Eberhart professes to abhor politics he is generally credited with entertaining political ambitions, are playing a waiting game and are well enough satisfied that the governor has shown no disposition to take advantage of his position to organize his forces.

A Discordant Note

So are the Democrats for that matter. In the meantime they are making hay. They do not at all anticipate that the peace which now broods over the counsels of the Republican party will remain for ever undisturbed, and they are watching for the next move, evidences of which they are looking for in the direction of Princeton. When Bob Dunn shies his caster in the ring, and the indications are that he soon will, there will be music in the air. It is now or never for him. We are enjoying now the lull before the storm.

Temperance Advocates Active.

For another thing the temperance people are conducting a quiet but none the less an effective campaign. They expect to cut a figure in the Republican convention, and, I am told, will have a candidate for governor upon whom the reform element in the Republican party will concentrate in the event that they cannot receive satisfactory assurances from Governor Eberhart that he vigorously and aggressively espouse their cause. On the other hand there are others who are sounding the governor. The interests have too much at stake to permit the governorship to go by default. The present executive can have their support if an understanding can be reached which they promise not to advertise. Still the whole situation is in a formative state; indeed at the present almost without form and void. The different elements in the Republican party are quietly sizing up the situation. One of these days something will drop and the fight will be on.

DON'T BE A KNOCKER

Gov. Hughes Found That to be the Song of the West.

In a recent speech Governor Hughes referred to the constant inquiry of reception committees and prominent citizens of how he liked their town during his recent trip to Seattle and other western cities, and he said it had made a deep impression on him. It showed him that the people had civic pride and enthusiasm, and the Jersey City Journal takes the remark as a lead to suggest that good citizens have a good word to say for their home town. They knows its good points, and if there are other peculiarities they do not present them.

The grumbler who knows all the bad features of a town and mentions them at every opportunity is not only a poor citizen, but he is one who does nothing to improve the town he lives in. It is good enough to provide a home for him and perhaps a place of business, or an occupation, but that is forgotten in the general flow of complaint.

Every resident can do something for the betterment of his town. If he cannot improve property for lack of means of ownership he can at least keep his own home neat and clean. He can have a clean yard, a grass plot or something to add to the appearance of the place, and above all he can say a good word for the place at every opportunity.

LAST BAND CONCERT

Band Boys Will Give Open Air Concert Friday Evening.

After the last street concert the band boys decided that that would be the last open air concert for the season, but the delightful fall weather has induced them to change their minds. The weather man consenting, there will be an open air concert Friday evening. The program has not been announced but Director Brunelle says that the boys will play a number of their best selections.

It has been said that there is nothing that a woman can do that a man can't do better. It is true that men win most of the prizes for fancy work and there are many more evidences of man's superiority in doing what custom has decreed shall be women's work. Lee Healy entertained the F. and F. B's Tuesday evening. The artistic decoration of rooms and table occasioned many feminine exclamations of admiration. It was a delightful social affair. A whole flock of girls could not have worked out more clever ideas for the entertainment of guests. There were some novel guessing contests, prizes of Alaskan curios being awarded to those guessing the use of instruments of torture and other articles used by the natives near the north pole.

$1,159,308 READY FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

October Apportionment is the Largest in the History of the State.

Red Lake County Will Get $11,400.—$3 For Each Pupil Attending 40 Days.

The biggest school fund apportionment in the history of the state was announced Tuesday when C. G. Schulz, state superintendent of instruction, directed the distribution of $1,159,808 among the schools of the state.

The distribution, which is known as the October apportionment, is on a basis of $3 per pupil and benefits 387,430 pupils, who have attended school forty or more days during the year. A year ago the distribution was on the basis of $2.70 per pupil.

Then $1,030,519 was distributed, enrollment being 381,674.

There are two apportionments of the school fund each year, the last being in March. At that time $687,000 was distributed.

Auditor Latendresse has not been officially notified of the amount that will be received for the Red Lake county schools, but it is known that it will be about $11,400.

Napoleon Arthur Poirier.

Napoleon Arthur Poirier, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Poirier, died at ten o'clock Sunday morning after a very brief illness. Death came as a shock to relatives for the little boy had been ill only three days. Pleural pneumonia was the cause of death. The deceased was a bright little boy and his untimely death has cast a gloom over the Poirier household. He was seven years, five months and twenty-one days old, having been born April 12, 1902.

Funeral services were held from St. Joseph's church at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon, Rev. Fr. Fayolle officiating. It is indeed a sad affliction that has come to the Poirier home and the bereaved relatives have the sympathy of friends.

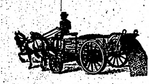
THE GREAT WESTERN



MANURE SPREADER

The man who invented the manure spreader certainly merits that honor. Of all the spreaders that have ever been brought out, we honestly believe that the Great Western Spreader has more good points and commendable characteristics than any that has ever been devised. It has heavy and large wood or iron wheels and wide track, front and rear endless apron, ratchet feed, entire oak frame, and is guaranteed to stand up under fifty per cent more strain and to require fifty per cent less repair than any other spreader built. It is the first and only spreader built to give entire satisfaction, not sometimes, but all the time.

5 DAMS GO OUT

CITY ELECTRIC PLANT DESTROYED IN SUDDEN AND UNEXPECTED FLOOD.

FOUR GO IN A FLASH

Doing Damage Estimated at $200,000 and Leaving City Without Light or Water—Public Schools Are Forced to Close.

Fergus Falls. — Five big masonry dams in the vicinity of Fergus Falls were washed away. First the big city concrete dam which furnished power for the electric light plant was washed out.

Two men who were sleeping in a nearby house were awakened by the noise of rushing water and noticed water pouring up through the cracks of the floor.

They hurried on up the hill where the electric light station was located, but before they had reached it the plant was washed away.

The city dam was 30 feet high and located one and a half miles north of the city. The water went with a fury and the water works dam, which is just outside of the city limits, gave way. A bridge which spans the river a short distance down the stream also was carried away. A number of buildings and other structures in the path of the flood were destroyed. Basements of buildings in this city are flooded, but no houses are known to have been taken.

Third Dam Washed Away.

The torrent of water encountered a third dam, known as the Wright dam. This dam furnished power for two large flour mills. The water washed around the west end of the mills and partly carried away one of them.

A fourth dam, known as the Red river mill dam, located a short distance down the stream, gave way. The Northern Pacific bridge, which spans the river at this point, was threatened for a time, but remained intact.

The fifth dam was the woolen mill dam. It furnished power for the local woolen mills. The dam remained standing but the water washed around the south side and rendered it useless.

The dams are all inside the city limits. On account of the city dam, which furnished power for the electric light plant, being washed out, every wheel in this city is shut down. The public schools were forced to close, owing to the lack of water supply.

Fergus Falls would be in a very bad way were it not for the fact that a large concrete dam, known as the Dayton Hollow dam, was constructed five miles below the city last year. This dam takes the flow of water from the Red river and Pelican river and furnishes 2,000 horsepower. A line will be immediately constructed to this dam and the lighting of the city resumed. The city water system and the insane hospital have auxiliary steam plants and these will be put into operation at once.

The loss to this city in the destruction of the electric light plant will be $65,000. It may also be liable for the destruction of the other dam, but this is not probable. The total loss is estimated at $200,000.

Coyne, who has been named administrator until a successor to Bishop Cotter is appointed. It is likely to be several months yet, it is said, before this appointment is made.

TO GRIND CANADIAN WHEAT.

New Tariff Law Provides for Domestic Sale of By-Products.

Minneapolis.—The Minneapolis flour mills will again be grinding Canadian wheat before another crop has been raised in the United States. This is the opinion of millers who have given close study to the new tariff bill and the drawback provisions therein. The great obstacle in the way of handling the imported raw material has been the disposal of the by-product. The bonding law on the statute books prior to the passage of the new tariff act hold that the entire product of the imported wheat should be exported, and the plan was therefore practically unworkable. The mills of Minneapolis did grind considerable wheat in bond and under drawback regulations, but that was in a time of an extraordinary general disarrangement of world's prices.

Drawback Provision.

The drawback provision now applying to millers and which will be particularly important to the mills of Minneapolis, Duluth, Buffalo, New York, and other centers close to the Canadian border, will permit the miller to enter the world's markets, buy wheat, grind it in bond and export the flour. The by-product may then be taken from the bonded mill and sold for domestic consumption upon the payment by the miller of the duty that would be assessed by the government if the by-products had been imported. The millers were contending for this while the tariff bill was before congress.

Miller Sizes Situation.

As to the ability of the millers to import wheat under this more liberal provision, the Northwestern Miller, which has been investigating the matter, says:

"Calculations have shown that under a 20 per cent ad valorem duty applying to by-products from foreign wheat, when the latter are withdrawn for domestic consumption, foreign wheat at 4½ cents a bushel under the American market, can be ground by the American miller without loss. At any price representing a greater difference than 4½ cents there would be a proportionate profit to the American miller."

MINN. DOCTORS AT WINONA.

State Meeting of Doctors Held on October 12, 13 and 14.

Winona.—One of the big and important conventions to be held in Winona this fall will be that of the State Medical Association, scheduled for Oct. 12, 13 and 14. An attendance of several hundred physicians is expected.

Recognizing the importance of obtaining the latest and most complete information concerning the scourge of anterior poliomyolitis, which has been experienced in many sections of the state this summer, a symposium upon this topic has been arranged as the opening feature of the convention. The sub-topics will be: "Previous Outbreaks," Dr. Haldor Sneve, of St. Paul; "Minnesota Outbreaks of 1908," Dr. A. S. Hamilton, of Minneapolis. Several physicians will participate in the discussion, during which the epidemiological, pathological and bacteriological data of recent outbreaks in Minnesota will be presented.

The address of the president of the association, Dr. Cornelius Williams, of St. Paul, will be made on Wednesday afternoon. Dr. Walter Wyman, surgeon general of the United States Public Health and Marine Service, will speak on "Administrative Problems in Relation to Public Health." This will be followed by a symposium on "Co-operation of State Forces in Minnesota Medicine," bringing out the relations between the different states bodies working for the promotion of health in Minnesota.

The closing day's session will open with a symposium on Ophthalmia neonatorum, in which James J. Dow, superintendent of the state school for the blind of Faribault, will be one of the speakers. Dr. Burnside Foster, of St. Paul, will also present a paper.

ESTATE VALUED AT $15,000.

Governor Johnson's Property Is Estimated at That Figure.

St. Peter.—It is estimated that Governor Johnson left an estate valued at $15,000, which includes his house, said to be worth about $7,000; life insurance, $5,000, and $1,500 in cash, the balance being in various investments.

It was believed that the governor had accumulated a much larger fortune, especially when it is considered that he received $200 for every one of his Chautauqua lectures. It has been found, however, that most of this went for expenses.

In planning for the future it appears that the governor had decided to accept a proposition made by an Eastern lecture bureau, which had offered him $20,000 for a course of lectures extending over a period of six months. It was then his intention to tour Europe and gather more material for additional lectures.

DUNLEVY NOT A CANDIDATE.

But Mayor's Partisans at East Grand Forks Put Up a Ticket.

East Grand Forks.—The political situation here is waxing warm. Mayor Dunlevy, who won at the last election by only four votes, is not a candidate for re-election, by Neil Kelleher will be the mayoralty candidate on the Dunlevy party ticket. James J. O'Leary, who was defeated by Dunlevy, will be the candidate on the opposing side. The election will be held Nov. 2.

Maltum Contains Alcohol.

Chetek.—John M. Thompson, charged with selling intoxicating liquor at Chetek, a dry city, was fined $75 and costs, a total of $135. District Attorney Soderberg proved by one of the defendant's own witnesses, the brewmaster of a brewing company, that the stuff sold by Thompson as a "temperance drink" is malt liquor. Chemist Otto Boberg, of Eau Claire, who analyzed Maltum, testified that it contains 2.18 per cent of alcohol and the brewmaster testified that it contained 1.97 per cent alcohol.

LOOT BANK SAFE

BOLD ROBBERS HOLD UP CASHIER IN BROAD DAYLIGHT AT GLENWOOD SPRINGS, COL.

ARMED POSSES PURSUE

Two Armed Men Enter Bank While Streets Are Crowded—Hold Up Cashier, Loot Safe and Make Escape.

Glenwood Springs, Col., Sept. 30.—Two armed posses are searching the mountains near here for two bandits who yesterday robbed the Citizens National bank of Glenwood Springs of $10,000.

The robbery took place in broad daylight while the street in front of the bank was thronged. The robbers elbowed their way through the crowd and entered the bank. F. E. Drach, acting cashier, was at the window.

The robbers wore no masks. Drach and his bookkeeper were compelled to throw up their hands and as they did so one of the men emptied the contents of the safe into a sack. The two robbers then made their way out of the rear door, mounted horses and galloped for the mountains.

An old trail runs from the once notorious Jackson's hole to Mexico passes in this vicinity, and it is thought the bandits have gained this trail and are on their way to Mexico.

During the pursuit one of the bandit's horses was shot down, but the men continued their flight on the one remaining animal.

TAFT DAY AT FAIR.

President's Own Programme Was Carried Out at Seattle.

Seattle, Sept. 30.—This was Taft day at the great Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition. Not only was the president the guest of honor, but he himself arranged the programme before he left Beverley, Mass. At 9:15 the president went to the exposition auditorium where he was received by the exposition reception committee.

From this point the president and his escort reviewed the parade of soldiers, marines, school children, Igorrotes, Indians, Eskimos and Japanese in costume.

Two hundred children maneuvered before the president and formed the letters T-A-F-T. The Igorrotes have been looking forward eagerly to the president's visit. Most of their babies born at the fair have been named for him.

HUNT DOWN MURDERERS.

Men and Bloodhounds on Trail of Slayers.

Lexington, Ky., Sept. 30.—A report from Buchanan county, West Virginia, just across the Kentucky state line, says that more than 300 men are engaged with bloodhounds in a chase over the mountains after the men who murdered George Meadows, his wife, three children and his mother-in-law, and then burned the family home at Hurley, Va., last Wednesday. It is alleged that the mother-in-law, Mrs. Justice, had $2,000 hidden in the house and that the money was carried off by the murderers. The William Writter Lumber Co., one of the biggest corporations in the mountains, has closed down and has ordered every employe to assist in the hunt.

SHOT MAN FOR DOG.

Cogswell, N. D.—F. Wallock lies in the hospital at Oakes in a precarious condition with a charge of shot in his shoulder. The shot was fired by John Seeman. The latter was coming home from a hunting trip and seeing something lying in the weeds beside the road which he thought was a dog, he called. He got no answer and he fired at the object. There was still no response, and going to the object he found it was Wallock. He ran for assistance and the man was removed to a farm house and later to the Oakes hospital. Seeman is under arrest.

HOT FROM THE WIRE.

Bangor, Me.—The Penobscot river is on a rampage. It is higher than it was ever known to be before at this season and is still rising. Two million feet of logs broke loose and it is feared that half of them will get out to sea and be lost.

PEARY'S SHIP HOME.

New York, Sept. 30.—With the flag of the Peary Arctic club at her masthead, the little steamer Roosevelt, which bore Commander Peary on his quest of the north pole, entered New York harbor today. It was barely daylight when the lookouts declared the vessel off Sandy Hook, coming slowly. Few of the vessels in the lower bay recognized the Arctic steamer as she rounded the Hook.

Commander Peary's ship arrives in the nick of time to participate in the closing ceremonies of the Hudson-Fulton celebration.

NIGHT RIDERS BUSY.

Paris, Ky., Sept. 30.—There has been a fresh outbreak of night riders in Blue Grass country, according to statements today by Judge J. J. Osborne of Cynthiana. A tenant on the farm of T. J. McDowell, who had steadfastly refused to join the pool of tobacco growers, was taken from his house Thursday night, stripped to the waist and given thirty lashes. The victim was then ordered to be in Brooksville the next day and sign over his tobacco or suffer more severely. He signed.

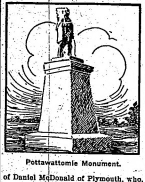
SHAFT TO MEMORY OF INDIANS

Monument Erected as Tribute to Pottawattomies Unveiled Near Plymouth, Ind.

Plymouth, Ind.—The seventy-first anniversary of the removal of Chief Menominee and his band of 859 Pottawattomies from Marshall county, Indiana, was marked by the unveiling of the first monument ever erected to an Indian through state or federal appropriation.

The shaft is at Twin Lakes, five miles from Plymouth, and is in memory to the aborigines that once held the Hoosier hunting grounds. The ceremonies were witnessed by hundreds. The granite was unveiled by Miss Julia Quakano Pokagon of Hartford, Mich., a granddaughter of the famous Pottawattomie chief, Pokagon, who died not long ago.

The monument to the memory of the Pottawattomie Indians is the result of consistent work on the part of Daniel McDonald of Plymouth, who, as a member of the Indiana legislature in 1907, secured an appropriation of $2,500 for the purpose.



Pottawattomie Monument.

The site is one of the beauty spots of nature. It is near where the old Indian chapel was built, under the direction of Father Baden, in which Menominee and his band, who had embraced Christianity, worshiped for many years. The monument was cut from Vermont granite. The pedestal is ten feet high, surmounted by the statue of an Indian seven feet high, in native costume. It is near the center of the Menominee reservation.

The story which leads up to the monument's erection is briefly told. In 1832 a treaty was made with some Indian chiefs by which they ceded their lands to the United States for $14,000 and agreed to remove to Indian Territory within two years. Menominee refused to sign this treaty or release his land to the government. When the Indians who had signed the treaty were ready to remove another attempt was made to get the Menominee lands.

A council was called at Twin Lakes and after considerable discussion Col. Pepper, the Indian agent, told Chief Menominee that he would have to release his lands and remove peaceably or be forcibly evicted. Then Menominee arose, drew his blanket around him and with dignity and eloquence that would have done honor to famous Chief Logan, rebuked the white man for usurping the country. The council adjourned without result.

Later the Indians were accused of molesting the white men. They were surrounded by the military and forcibly evicted. It was a sad scene. The village was wrecked. Mass was sung in the little chapel by Father Baden, the first Catholic priest ordained in Indiana.

On September 4, 1838, the procession started south. Many Indians fell ill. The soldiers were unsuccessful and finally withdrew in favor of the priest. Father Baden fulfilled his mission and his journey, but on his return he died. His body now lies at Notre Dame.

The Wolf in Sheep's Clothing.

A wolf, clothing himself in the skin of a sheep, and getting in among the flock, by this means took the opportunity to devour many of them. At last the shepherd discovered him and cunningly fastened a rope about his neck, tied him up to a tree which stood hard by. Some other shepherds happening to pass that way and observing what he was about, drew near and expressed their admiration at it. "What!" says one of them, "brother, do you make hanging of a sheep?" "No," replied the other, "but I make hanging of a wolf whenever I catch him, though in the habit and garb of a sheep." Then he showed them their mistake and they applauded the justice of the execution.—Aesop (seventh century B. C.)

Make Good Husbands.

Countess Carle Dentici Di Frasso, who was Miss Georgiana Wilde, and formerly lived in St. Louis, says that foreigners are much kinder to their wives than the Americans. Her husband works as hard as any American man, she says, having his business and being a member of parliament. And yet he finds time to come home for luncheon and see his wife several times during the day. The distances in Italy, she says, are just as great as in New York, and an American business man would never think of going home to luncheon. A European man in politics depends upon his wife's aid to further his aims, and when in business he reasons that two heads are better than one, and is willing to concede that his wife's intelligence is equal to his own. This mental intimacy, she says, makes the marriage of American girls and foreigners, as a general thing, very pleasant, and is the reason for fewer divorces abroad than in this country.

Makas' Idea of Hospitality.

The commander of a punitive force in the Cameroons sent to chastise some recalcitrant natives has just made his report to the German government. The tribe giving trouble is known as the Makas, and they delight in cannibalism.

The chiefs, according to the report, fatten slaves to eat them. Capt. Dominik says that it is the custom of the country, should visitors arrive unexpectedly, to bring in one of the slaves and kill him as we should a fowl for the entertainment and welcome of the guests.

Both Wilbur Wright and Gnenn H. Curtiss Successfully Navigate Their Heavier Than Air Machines Over the Harbor—Wave Greetings to Spectators.

New York, Sept. 29.—The aeroplanes flew over New York bay today and racing balloons sped up the Hudson river for the first time in history. The tricky gusts of the harbor and towering masts of shipping were defied by Wilbur Wright and Glenn H. Curtiss, whose performances today promised the fulfillemnt of their contracts with the Hudson-Fulton commission to make flights of one hour durtaion over the waters about New York.

The big dirigibles that started up Hudson valley were piloted by Capt. Thomas S. Baldwin and George L. Tomlinson, who were racing for a prize of $10,000, offered by The New York World, with Albany as their goal.

Wilbur Wright made two flights, each ob about five miles. The second time he darted far out over the bay, circling the statue of Liberty and waving a greeting to passengers on the boats below. Curtiss' flight was on Governor's Island.

TOWN UNDER WATER.

Hundreds of Families Homeless in Southern Wales.

London, Sept. 29.—An inundation in Southern Wales has rendered hundreds of families temporarily homeless. The floods were caused by the river Avon bursting its banks in consequence of unprecedented rain storms. Practically the entire town of Aberavon, with a population of 8,000, is under water the depth of which varies from two to six feet.

In some cases the inhabitants have been obliged to take refuge on the roofs to escape. A number of bridges and buildings have been swept away, railroad beds have been damaged and trains held up by deposits of mud.

So far as is known only one man has been drowned, but the financial losses are heavy.

BANKERS GO TO JAIL.

Pittsburg Wreckers Begin Their Sentences at Leavenworth.

Leavenworth, Kas., Sept. 29.—William Montgomery, former cashier of the Allegheny National bank of Pittsburg, Pa., and Herbert W. Tiers, former bookkeeper of the First National bank of Pittsburg, were brought to the federal prison here last night.

Montgomery is unde a sentence of fifteen years for embezzling $469,000, while Tiers is under a five-year sentence. After being measured by the Bertillion system, the two men were assigned to cells.

PEARY STARTS HOME.

Has a Conference With General Hubbard About Cook.

Bar Harbor, Me., Sept. 29.—After a two days' conference with Gen. Thomas H. Hubbard, president of the Peary Arctic club, outlining the plans of campaign to determine whether Dr. Cook reached the north pole or not, Commander Robert E. Peary and wife leave here today for home. The explorer declared that only General Hubbard and himself had knowledge of what was contained in the statement which would be issued to show that Dr. Cook could not have reached the pole.

ANOTHER SPEED VICTIM.

Professional Auto Racer Hurt—His Mechanican Killed.

Riverhead, L. I., Sept. 29.—Herbert H. Lyttle, one of the best known professional automobile racers in the country, was dangerously hurt and his mechanician, James Bates, was so badly injured that he died shortly after reaching the hospital today, in the Long Island stock car races near Riverhead.

CONDENSED NEWS OF DAY.

New Haven, Conn.—Six men, negroes and Italians, were buried alive by the caving of a tunnel here. Crews are digging to rescue them but there appears to be no hope.

Philadelphia, Pa.—President Geo. F. Baer of the Reading Coal Co., issued a statement in which he denied that there was any agreement, combination or conspiracy to control anthracite output.

North Yakima, Wash.—President Taft reached here exhausted after his long stay in Spokane where he made six speeches. He went from here to Seattle.

Calcutta, Sept. 29.—The British steamer Clan Mackintosh, which was reported from Ragoon to have blown up at sea, arrived here today. The steamer has met with no accident.

Pottstown, Pa.—After a quarrel with his wife, Samuel Troxell, aged 35, of Oley Line, killed her and himself. Two of their small children saw the double tragedy.

SPANIARDS VICTORIOUS.

Occupy a Strong Moroccan Fortress—No Resistance.

Madrid, Sept. 29.—It is officially announced that the Spanish troops occupied Mount Gurgua, Morocco, at 7 o'clock this morning. The ascent of the omuntain and its occupation were effected without resistance. The troops saluted the raising of the flag with prolonged cheering.

News of the Spanish success was communicated to King Alfonso, who manifested great satisfaction.

STATE EQUITY MEET.

Will Be Held Valley City to Elect State Officers Oct. 27.

Valley City, N. D., Sept. 29.—The state convention of the American Society of Equity, will meet at Valley City, Wednesday, Oct. 27. All local unions are entitled to representation at this meeting, and there will undoubtedly be a large attendance.

The main purpose of the convention will be to elect state officers for the ensuing year.

LOUIS XIV GARDEN

DRIVING out the beautiful avenue of Santa Fe, that practically begins at the Plaza San Martin, and after a due western extension of some 500 yards, bends to the northwest and follows roughly the course of the La Plata for a distance of three miles (40 squares), the entrance to the Botanical garden of Buenos Aires is reached. Beyond this lies the Zoological garden, and still farther on the far-famed Park of Palermo. From both of these the Botanical garden is distinct in spirit and style. It is the embodiment of a refined and artistic taste, a really marvelous blending of the beautiful and the useful.

In 1892 this land was granted to the director general of the public parks, M. Thays, for the establishment of the Botanical garden and the garden was opened to the public in September, 1898. One must know something of the soil and the seasons here to understand how, even with a masterly hand at the helm, such marvels have been accomplished in so short a time.

Certain students of medicine and pharmacy from the National college, and other schools of the city, frequent the garden and spend hours in interesting study. Indeed, they have a rich field from which to glean, as there are, in what is called the School of Botany, over 6,000 species, all perfectly classified according to the system of De Candolle.

The garden contains about 20 acres of ground, half of which is level, the other half very uneven and ending on the northern side in steep banks that overlook the street, Las Heras. This street is named in honor of the hero whose ashes were recently brought home from Chile, and received with such pomp and ceremony by his appreciative countrymen.

The entire area is triangular in form and is divided into 14 different sections, each plainly marked and devoted to the flora of a distinct region.

The three pronounced styles of gardening, which, in a comparatively small area might have produced an inharmonious effect, or at least a lack of unity, are so charmingly blended as to give, instead, the fine delight of variety.

The Garden Louis XIV. is, of course, the most pretentious bit; the "finished coquette," some one calls it, with its statues and fountains and its well-trimmed borders of box. It must not be inferred that the French garden is superficial (except as this is the usual characteristic of gardens), for there is, both in this and in the Roman garden, a whole history written for those who know how to read it.

To one not bent on special study and whose knowledge of the art of gardening, past and present, is limited, and who prefers a quiet walk to dress parade, the English garden, as it is called, appeals most strongly.

Not only are the two Americas royally represented, but Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia as well. These sections are separated by beautiful walks with exquisite curves and turns; here a magnificent tree, there a flowering shrub, everything in accordance with an artistic taste.

In the South American section, particularly of the Argentine Republic, the collection is wonderfully complete, and exceedingly varied and interesting, from the Anthurium of the north to the Fagus Antarcticus of the south. The tipa, a species of acacia, is chief of the ornamental trees; when properly cared for, it grows into a beautiful, shapely tree. The leaf is much like that of the locust, and the blossoms, though of the same form as the locust, are a brilliant yellow instead of white. The fame of this tree has gone abroad. One of Rio Janeiro's most beautiful avenues is, in part, adorned by tipas. France, too, now boasts some fine specimens. It grows in any soil, and its bark contains an insect poison that renders it invulnerable to these enemies.

The quebracho (ax-breaker) is a leguminous tree also, and is the most valuable and costly of the Argentine woods. Its color is a dark, rich red, and it is so hard and heavy that it seems like iron. It is much used for all kinds of posts, also in tanning, and is highly prized by shipbuilders, as the water does not injure it.

Several varieties of the algarrobo grow here. In one province—San Luis—not only are the cattle fed on the long pods, but the poorer people find them a nourishing food.

The jacaranda is another ornamental tree much admired for its fern-like foliage and beautiful purple-blue flowers.

The mahogany tree is a native of the province of Buenos Aires, and there are several fine specimens in the garden, with the characteristic bifurcated leaf. The blossoms appear in December; they are white, and in form something like a small magnolia bloom.

The naracatia, from one of the northern provinces, attains great size and is of unusual service to the people. The pith is edible and is cooked and served in many ways. The bark is made into casks and barrels. As the tree sometimes has a diameter of more than a meter, one length of bark serves for a cask.

The paradise tree and the celba are great favorites; the former, on account of its rich purple flowers, the latter on account of its brilliant red ones. This is said to have been the favorite tree of Rosas.

There is a beautiful large tree from Misiones, the celtis tala, whose delicate leaves are very like smilax, just a shade darker and thicker. The really ugly tree of the garden is the palo borracho (drunken stick), with a shapeless swelled trunk, covered with thorns, and having small, irregular branches. It is, however, very useful, as it furnishes a species of vegetable silk.

In the Tierra del Fuego section, or subsection, there is a most lovely araucaria, a fine dark green, except the tips of the branches, which are of a softer, lighter color. The leaves really seem a sort of developed thorn.

Of all the Argentine trees, the ombu is the most remarkable, with its thick, soft bark, its spongy wood, its dense foliage, and long clusters of white blossoms. It is of rapid growth and attains an enormous size. The soil here is too rich for it; so, in self-defense, its immense roots, after a few years, seek the surface. The older trees have numerous little tender branches that spring directly from this surface root and grow straight up through the thick branches, trying to reach the light. There is one in the garden, eight years old, with a height of 50 feet and a diameter of three. At about two feet above the ground the trunk divides into two smaller trunks, each sending off long, straight branches. Its roots are just beginning to appear. It is an ideal tree for a children's playground, with possibilities for climbing about and even for keeping house among its hospitable branches.

The section of acclimatization is very interesting. Here may be seen the result of assiduous efforts to cultivate various exotic as well indigenous plants. One very notable success has been that of the cultivation of the yerba mate of Paraguay. After a number of fruitless efforts M. Thays succeeded by the following method: The seeds were placed in water almost boiling hot; every six hours the hot water was renewed. This was kept up for four days; then the seeds, three in number, were pressed out of their little sheath and planted in a special soil, covered to a certain depth and kept constantly moist. Six months' time, and even a year in some instances, was needed for the sprouting. When the plants grew to be 2½ inches high they were placed in separate pots; when 12 inches, they were planted in the garden, where some of them have now reached a height of 12 feet. What is particularly promising is that the seed from these plants will grow without any special preparation. There has been some discussion as to whether this manner of germination is a modern idea or a rediscovery of the process used by the Jesuits, the secret of which they carried away with them when expelled from their possessions in Paraguay. The mate consumed in the country costs $4,000,000 annually, so it is well worth while to develop its cultivation. As, however, the Argentine Republic becomes Anglicized, it demands tea instead of mate, regardless of the advice of physicians, who claim that mate is the more wholesome beverage.

The collection of ferns is very large, from the innumerable varieties of the dainty maidenhair to the tree fern.

The cactus in number and variety almost equals the fern. One very rare variety from the region of the Andes is always shown to visitors. It is particularly ugly, with its long, stiff stalks in spiny ridges.

Among the water lilies, the Victoria regia, with its enormous pads, is a great curiosity to foreigners, though it abounds in the northern provinces of the republic, and is called irupe by the Guarani Indians. It is also said to have a leaf so thick and strong that it will bear the weight of a baby several months old. There is only one large plant growing "al aire libre" in this garden, and it is the pride of the pond.

Of orchids there are some lovely specimens.

The representative flora of the Old World deserves extended space, Europe almost suggesting a World's fair, with here a bit of Spain or Italy, there of Norway, and still farther on a glimpse of Germany. Asia is not more interesting, but more unusual than Europe. There is, of course, the bamboo, with its suggestion of marvelous tales, and from the north a bush covered with lovely white flowers, a sort of spirea. Among the Japanese trees is the ginkgo, with its small and graceful fan-shaped leaves.

Africa is chiefly conspicuous for palms of many kinds, with an occasional royal cedar towering above. Where a bit of the great Sahara is pointed out, it requires a stretch of the imagination to see more than the oases.

Australia is extensively represented. There are 60 different varieties of eucalyptus in this section and the saltbushes are no longer allowed in the main part of the garden; though the gardeners still seem proud of the ugly, scraggy bushes. They grow prodigiously in this soil, and thrive in any. The Australian variety has a thicker, more succulent leaf than the others.

Besides the sections mentioned, there is one for industrial and medicinal plants, the section of fruit trees, and still another section devoted to the various methods of reproduction, whether by seed, grafting, or budding.

There are also two conservatories. One of them is beautiful and almost new. The older one was awarded a premium in the Paris exposition of 1889, both for its artistic construction and for the excellent arrangement for heating and ventilating its three divisions, which are kept at a temperature of 25 deg., 18 deg., and 12 deg., respectively. The substantial building is an inheritance from the department of agriculture, which formerly occupied this plot of ground. It contains the residence of the director, various offices, and a small museum.

Agricultural explorers who have visited the most famous botanical gardens of both the Old and the New Worlds have written of this one in words of highest praise and appreciation.

Buenos Aires has reason to be proud of its botanical garden, not only because it is one of the richest and most varied in the world, but because of the persistent effort made here to cultivate to the utmost the plants and trees indigenous to the country.

The Last Man Ashore.

It was now nearly half a minute past this big steamboat's sailing time and she hadn't started yet. Usually she got away on the stroke of the minute. The cause of the trouble was clear.

Up the gangplank which had been held that half minute for him came a man, a tolerably big and stalwart sort of man, who had not heard or had not heeded the warning given five minutes before in every part of the boat for all to go ashore that were going. But at last up the gangplank he came, a solitary figure in the plank's wide, long space, and with all the passengers lining that side of the boat looking down upon him with interest, while forward, with his hand on a bell pull at the side of the deck, stood the captain, ready to give the signal in the engine room the instant that man stepped off the gangplank and the plank was hauled ashore.

And so that last man to go ashore passed up the gangplank, not looking up, but not hurrying, walking calmly, while everybody on the boat looked down, and while at the same time there stood at either side of the plank and with their hands resting upon the top rails six stalwart and able-bodied longshoremen, ready to lift the plank and surge it shoreward about as soon as this gentleman stepped off it, which they did. They let him get about a foot clear of it and then they lifted it, and with the first surge they gave it brought up against his heels.

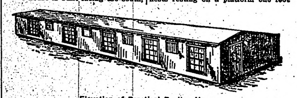
Whereupon the last man ashore turned with fire in his eye and with an evident desire to lick somebody, and he was an able-looking man. Undoubtedly he could have licked somebody, perhaps two, but the briefest reflection told him that he could not get away with the 12 longshoremen that he now saw smiling at him, whereupon again he turned, now smiling himself, and started on, while in the meantime the instant the gangplank was cleared the captain on the boat had yanked that bell pull and the last lines had been cast off, and now the boat too, though fully 40 seconds late, was at last on her way.

PRACTICAL WINTER HOUSE FOR KEEPING POULTRY

In Constructing Care Should Be Taken to Select Well Drained Soil and Pay Attention to Ventilation.

In housing fowls in winter, care should be taken to have your building warm and well ventilated in such a manner as to prevent all direct drafts of air coming in contact with the fowls, and at the same time do away with the moisture and frost collecting upon the ceiling and walls of the house, writes A. E. Vandervart in Farm and Fireside. It is much better to have a cold, well ventilated house than to have one very warm and poorly ventilated, and your fowls will be much healthier and lay better in the former than in the latter.

In building a house, one should take into consideration the climatic conditions of the locality in which the house is to be built. A well-drained soil should be selected, and avoid building in a hollow where water will collect, if you do not want any trouble. Many are partial to the open-front, scratching-shed style of building, and while they are all right for certain locations, in this locality I have found the house described and illustrated to be preferable.

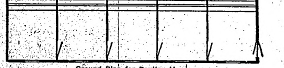


Elevation of Practical Poultry House.

The house is built facing the south, and is 15 feet wide, 50 feet long, four and one-half feet high in back, six feet high in front and seven feet high at the highest point. These dimensions and the style of roof make a low house which is warmer than one higher, yet it is plenty high enough to work in.

The frame plates are made of two-by-fours and the sills and corner posts of four-by-fours. The outside is boarded as tightly as possible with hemlock boards, and a cheap grade of house-siding is used for the siding, with a good grade of tarred paper between the boards and the siding. For the roof, roofing-paper is used, and is put on in strips from the front to the back of the house.

Five double-sash windows occupy about one-fourth of the front, and extend nearly the whole height of the front of the building, allowing the sun's rays to shine directly onto the floor of the house. Sun is an excellent tonic for the fowls, and should always be taken into consideration when constructing a poultry-house.



Ground Plan for Poultry House.

Four holes, two feet square, are cut near the top between the windows. These are covered with muslin, and used for ventilators. These ventilators, and opening the windows on pleasant days, form a perfect method of ventilation, and practically do away with all moisture and frost on the walls and ceilings of the building, and supply an abundance of pure air free from drafts.

The house is divided into five pens, each ten by fifteen feet. The partitions are boarded up for a distance of about two feet, and wire netting is used the rest of the way to the ceiling. The doors between each pen are three feet wide, and are covered with wire netting. The dropping-boards and nests occupy the north side of the building. The dropping-boards are three feet above the floor, and three and one-half feet wide, and extend the width of the pen (ten feet). The perches are made of two-by-twos, planed and with the edges rounded. These are six inches from the dropping-boards, and are hinged to the building so they can be raised and fastened when cleaning off the dropping-boards.

Under the dropping-boards are eight nests resting on a platform one foot below the dropping-baords. A hinged door occupies the front the these, from which the eggs are gathered. This arrangement of roosts and nests gives the fowls use of the entire floor-space. The water-fountains and grit-boxes are placed on the partition-boards.

The floor is of concrete, and constructed in the following manner: The space up to the bottom of the sills is filled with crushed stone. On this is spread a thin coat of cement, enough to make a smooth surface. On this is placed a layer of thick tarred paper and over this a layer of cement (three parts sand and one part cement). This makes and ideal floor for a poultry-house. It is wind and rat proof and the tarred paper keeps the moisture out. It is easily constructed, easily cleaned, and, above all, lasts a lifetime.

The yards are at the rear of the building, and are 70 feet long by ten feet wide, and in these are planted rows of plum trees. Connected with these yards is another large yard surrounding an orchard. Each pen is given this yard for half a day, which makes an excellent forage place for the fowls.

SEPARATED MILK FOR CALVES

Youngster That Sucks Cow Does Well Until Weaned—Sweet Skimmed Milk Makes Bone and Sinew.

There is no doubt but that calves do exceedingly well on separated milk. The calf that sucks the cow will do well until weaning time comes, but the calf that gets its warm, fresh, separated milk will flourish the whole year round. For the sake of a few more pounds of butter the calf is often starved to a gaunt, unsightly little dwarf and never comes to maturity and is always poor property to its owner. By allowing it fresh, warm milk from the separator you will have a big, strong calf in such a condition that will give the best results for the extra care and labor, the same as other stock kept in a thriving condition. Sweet skimmed milk makes bone and sinew for the calf. We are looking after the calf that is to be raised to maturity and there are cheaper foods than 25-cent butter fat upon which to raise calves. That is, buy centrifugal cream separators, if you do not have one already, and feed your calves the milk as soon as run through the separator, while it yet contains the animal heat and in the condition just suited to the needs of the calf. We believe that every farmer who keeps from three to ten good cows and wishes to grow good calves will find it to his advantage to buy a good cream separator and use it intelligently.

COMMON SENSE WITH MEDICINE

In Treating Ills of Live Stock Judgment Must Be Mixed With the Drugs Administered.

In handling livestock and treating livestock ills, much common sense must be mixed with medicine. In fact, many minor animal ills may be cured without resorting to medicine.

The writer has a mare that became stiff and lame in one front leg last winter. We were told all sorts of things were the matter with her, and many remedies were prescribed. We had been away from home for a few weeks and found that the mare had lost the shoe from the lame foot and that she had been confined in her stall nearly all of the time.

To reduce soreness, the leg was bathed in a water solution of salt and vinegar, slightly warm. Each night and morning the leg and shoulder were given a good, brisk rubbing to stimulate good circulation of blood. The mare resented the treatment at first, but soon willingly permitted it and afterward seemed to enjoy it. The lameness and stiffness began to gradually disappear and she was practically well within two weeks. During this time she was worked lightly almost daily and allowed outside freedom when weather permitted. Keeping the blood flowing through exercise and rubbing effected the cure, we believe.

Cut Out the Suckers.

Go through the orchard at this season and cut out the suckers and mutilated branches. The suckers extract unnecessary nourishment from the trees and mutilated branches will injure the trees more or less and are unsightly in the orchard. Burn immediately all branches infested with blight or other disease to keep the disease from spreading.

Hog No Glutton.

The hog is not a glutton and filthy animal, popular belief to the contrary. He wants enough to eat and clean quarters. Dry lot feeding makes gluttons of hogs. Give them free range and wholesome food and they will eat just enough for their best development.

Polluted Drinking Water.

Many of the disorders of fowls may be traced directly to polluted drinking water. The foundations should be thoroughly cleaned every day and fresh water given. Some good disinfectant should be used in washing the drinking fountains [illegible]

FOOLISH CRY OF "TOO OLD"

Capable Worker of Fifty Is Preferred to the Shirker of Fewer Years.

A discussion has taken place in the New York Times on the question of finding employment for men who are no longer young. In reality, in every position where original ability as well as experience must be taken into account, men of over 50 are often superior to those under that age. While young men have achieved wonderful things under the direction of older heads, the greatest and most permanently useful work of the world has been done by men whom many of us would now call old. [illegible]

In science, in literature and in professional work generally the most difficult tasks [illegible] ed to men [illegible]

Galileo was "old" when he announced his great discovery of the eath's movement around the sun. Milton was "old" when he wrote "Paradise Lost." Goethe was 80 when he wrote the second part of "Faust." And even when only physical endurance is at stake men of 70 can sometimes best men of 30—take the case of Edward Payson Weston. [illegible]

This cry of "too old" is really senseless in a great many cases. The employer who is seeking for a good man [illegible] to a shirker and a "ne'er-do-weel" of five and twenty. When employers act otherwise they only show their own lack of common sense.—Rochester Express.

The discovery of the north pole has suggested a possible use for Charlie Fairbanks.

Now if Ralph Wheelock only doesn't insist on appointing those South Dakota chums to office.

The daily papers are talking of Fred W. Johnson, brother of the lamented governor, for the Democratic nomination next year. Fred has a lot of qualifications in his own right.

England may be outdone by the United State in many thing, but there is something impressive about the fact that not one passenger on an English railway was killed during 1908.

The commission plan of numicipal government received a serious set-back in its first try-out in Minnesota. Mankato held an election last week to vote on the proposition, and it was rejected by a majority of 24.

Entries for the gubernatorial handicap are now in order. Eberhart and Dunn are already in the race, while Brower, Young, Lee, Jacobson and a field of dark horses are wondering if the chance is worth the entrance fee.

President Taft's speeches have been far from encouraging to the Republicans of the middle west. He praised Aldrich and Cannon at Boston, declared for postal savings banks at Milwaukee, defended the iniquituous tariff bill at Winona and came out flat-footedly for ship subsidy at Portland. The Republican candidates for congress in Minnesota will find it difficult to square themselves with the Taft progam.

The Red Wing Free Press says that Governor Eberhart's modest utterances and conduct upon assuming Gov. Johnson's place have won him many friends among the people. His declaration that he would carry out the Johnson policies as far as possible during the Johnson term, on the ground that he himself was governor merely through accident, proves him to be a man with the qualities that people esteem.

Governor Johnson of Minnesota left but ten to fifteen thousand dollars behind in the way of material wealth. Harriman left seventy to one hundred million, says the Fargo SearchLight. But the late Governor left a record of good private and public citizenship, a record of faithful service for and in behalf of humanity, a record of personal and public honesty and integrity, a record of continued exemplification of good citizenship, and left no shadow hanging over his memory of grasping and squeezing the people's purses directly or indirectly. He left an indellible impress for good upon the puplic mind, and his life will ever be an inspiration for right doing. What did Harriman leave behind? He is buried in a magnificent mausoleum, but Johnson, while his body has been consigned to mother earth, yet lines and will continue to live in the hearts of the people. Which life would you choose to have lived, that of the late Governor Johnson, or that of E. H. Harriman? Think it over honestly and conscientiously.

SPEAKING of the rights of women It has lately been announced by the Norwegian government, which controls most of the railroads of that country, that married women traveling with their husbands, can ride for half fare. It is the idea of the government authorities that the married women of that country stay too close at home, and the reduced fare is made to induce them to travel and take vacations.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in one or the last addresses that he made to his Sunday school class before abandoning it, said of carefulness in business: "Too many business men are careful on one side, their own side only. Thus a coal dealer whom I used to know shouted one afternoon to an employee who was driving out of the yard: 'Hold on there, Jim! That coal can't have been weighed. It looks a trifle large for a ton to me.' Jim shouted back: 'This ain't a ton, boss, it's two tons.' 'Oh, all right,' said the dealer, in a mollified tone, 'beg your pardon. Go ahead.'"

FRANK DAY'S TRIBUTE.

For more than twenty years Governor Johnson and Frank A. Day were newspaper editors in neighboring towns in southern Minnesota and close personal friends. During all the years of the governor's political activities, Mr. Day was his adviser and confidant, as well as manager of all his campaigns. Naturally, their relations were very close, and the tribute Mr. Day pays to his lamented chieftain has the element of comradeship and brotherly affection. In an address at the Fairmont memorial last Sunday, Mr. Day said:

"In my opinion the greatest work Governor Johnson has done for his people was the utilization of his talent for public speaking in going about the state and addressing public meetings. During the nearly five years of his occupancy of the governor's office he has visited practically every county in attending the many functions to which he had been invited. Exclusive of his campaign tours, he has graced nearly four hundred gatherings with his presence and preached the doctrines of cheerfulness and optimism. He has dedicated court houses and churches and school buildings, attended county fairs, dairy meetings, society anniversaries—but the list is too long for enumeration. Like Paul of Tarsus he was the evangel of the better life, of public and private virtue. The common things of life appealed to him, and there was no constraint or affection in his preachment of the gospel of contentment.

"The gentle voice, the friendly hand, the kindly smile, the beaming eye reflected the inner shrine of his great and loving soul, and no one could go out of his presence without a feeling of uplift and the involuntary knowledge that he was happier and better fitted for the day's work by reason of the personal contact.

"The room of the private secretary in the governor's apartments has always been the morning meeting place of the members of the official family, the newspaper reporters, and the friends on a casual visit to the capitol. Every morning when at home the governor would drop into this room to greet the group. He was always happy, and his genial handshake and cheery smile, like the perfume of a rose, spread their radiance to every corner of the room. With a pleasant greeting for all, he would often become interested in a subject under discussion, and then for ten minutes could be seen the real Johnson—his broad sympathy, his high ideals, his unsurpassed oratory of conversation, his love of debate, his hopefulness, his gentleness, his strength. His bohemianism was aften remarked, and yet the general acceptance of the definition of the word hardly expresses it, for his bohemianism applied only to the higher life. There was no touch of the gross or vulgar in Governor Johnson. True he loved a joke, and he spoke many a verity in jest, but he never gave offence. One of his great qualities—one of the reasons for the love and esteem in which he was held by railroad magnate and hod carrier, and all the stratas between—was his absolute incapacity to wound a heart or to misjudge the good intentions of a friend. Perhaps it may be said, in all kindness to his memory, he was inclined to be a little blind to the frailities of others.

"To me and to those privileged to have close personal relations with this great soul, could not help but come a fondness and affection not often entertained outside the intimacy of the family circle. Governor Johnson was a thoughtful man even in the small things of life, he was considerate of those about him, and was the last man on earth to take advantage of human frailty or physical or mental shortcomings. Himself strong in mentality, and in a sense conscious of his superior strength, it can never be said that Governor Johnson sought to gain eminence or seek advantages by reason of a lack of those qualities in others.

"Governor Johnson had his trials, his misfortunes and his struggles, like other men, but he never allowed his worries to affect his placid disposition He bore his burden cheerfully, and in the largeness of his heart found room for sympathy and love for others with hearts bowed down.

"He was not incapable of anger, but his anger was impersonal. An improper or dishonorable proposition did not appeal to him as suggesting anger at the person making the proposition, but rather the fury would be directed at the proposal itself. He was incapable of guile or deceit, the openness of his heart was reflected in the frankness of his countenance: the perennial smile was the honest expression of an honest soul.

"Death found him at the zenith of his powers and at the summit of his opportunities. It is hard to understand that his death was necessary in the Eternal Plan, but the narrow vision of human eyes cannot reach the portals of the Unknown! His life was a benediction and an inspiration, and he leaves an imperishable legacy of faith in the nation's destiny. Truly, 'a prince and a great man has fallen in Israel.'"

S.S.S. HEALS OLD SORES

No old sore exists merely because the flesh is diseased at that particular spot; if this were true simple cleanliness and local applications would heal them. Whenever a sore or ulcer refuses to heal readily, the blood is at fault; this vital fluid is filled with impurities and poisons which are being constantly discharged into the place, feeding it with noxious matter and irritating and inflaming the nerves and tissues so the sore cannot heal. These impurities in the blood may be the remains of some constitutional trouble, the effect of a debilitating spell of sickness, leaving disease germs in the system, or the absorption by the blood of the fermented refuse matter which the bodily channels of waste have failed to remove. Again the cause may be hereditary, the diseased blood of ancestry being handed down to posterity; but whatever the cause, the fact that the sore will not heal shows the necessity for the very best constitutional treatment. There is nothing that causes more worry and anxiety than an old sore which resists treatment. Every symptom suggests pollution and disease—the discharge, the red, angry looking flesh, the pain and inflammation, and the discoloration of surrounding parts, all show that deep down in the blood there are morbid and dangerous forces at work, constantly creating poisons which may in the end lead to Cancer. Local applications are valuable only for their cleansing and antiseptic effects; they do not reach the blood, where the real cause is located, and can therefore have no real curative worth. S. S. S. heals old sores by going down to the fountain-head of the trouble and driving out the poison-producing germs and morbid matters which are keeping the ulcer open. It removes every particle of impurity from the circulation and makes this life-stream pure, fresh and health-sustaining. Then as new, rich blood is carried to the place the healing begins, all discharge ceases, the inflammation leaves, new tissue and healthy flesh are formed, and soon the sore or ulcer is well. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers and finest of tonics, just what is needed in the treatment, and in addition to curing the sore will build up and strengthen every part of the system. Special book on Sores and Ulcers and any medical advice desired furnished free to all who write. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

I want to recommend S. S. S. to any who are in need of a blood purifier, and especially as a remedy for sores and obstinate ulcers. In 1877 I had my leg badly cut on the sharp edge of a barrel, and having on a blue woolen stocking the place was badly poisoned from the dye. A great sore formed and for years no one knows what I suffered with the place. I tried, it seemed to me, everything I had ever heard of, but I got no relief and I thought I would have to go through life with an angry, discharging sore on my leg. At last I began the use of S. S. S., and it was but a short time until I saw that the place was improving. I continued it until it removed all the poison from my blood and made a complete and permanent cure of the sore. JNO. ELLIS.

Cough Caution

Never, positively never poison your lungs. If you cough—even from a simple cold only—you should always heal, soothe, and ease the irritated bronchial tubes. Don't blindly suppress it with a stupefying poison. It's strange how some things finally come about. For twenty years Dr. Shoop has constantly warned people not to take cough mixtures or prescriptions containing Opium, Chloroform, or similar poisons. And now—a little late though—Congress says "Put it on the label, if poisons are in your Cough Mixture." Good! Very good!! Hereafter for this very reason mothers, and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's labels—and none in the medicine, else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those that know it best, a truly remarkable cough remedy. Take no chance then, particularly with your children. Insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Compare carefully the Dr. Shoop package with others and note the difference. No poison marks there! You can always be on the safe side by demanding

Tickling or dry coughs will quickly loosen when using Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy. And it is so thoroughly harmless that Dr. Shoop tells mothers to use nothing else, even for very young babies. The wholesome green leaves and tender stems of a lung healing mountainous shrub give the curative properties to Dr. Shoop's Cough Remedy. It calms the cough, heals the sensitive bronchial membranes. It's a pity when sick ones drug the stomach or stimulate the heart and kidneys. That is all wrong. A weak stomach means weak stomach nerves, always. And this is also true of the heart and kidneys. The weak nerves are instead crying out for help. This explains why Dr. Shoop's Restorative is promptly helping stomach heart and kidney ailments. The Restorative reaches out for the actual cause of these ailments—the failing "inside nerves." Anyway, test the Restorative 48 hours. It won't cure so soon as that, but you will surely know that help is coming. Sold by all dealers.

Whereas, a petition bearing date the 11th day of August, 1909, signed by Peder H. Thoreson, Peter P. Korstad, Ole Johnsrud, Christ Odegard, Oluf O. Omlid, Ole P. Borstad, Michael Stengel, Jos. Trenda, Ole O. Sunsdahl, Idan Thoreson, Even Ljulestad, Andrew Nelson and John T. Homme praying for the establishment of a ditch in said County, designated and numbered by the County Auditor as County Ditch No. 38, the route of which is fully described in said petition, together with a proper bond accompanying the same, has been filed with the County Auditor of said County; and said County Auditor has given due notice of the pendency of said petition, and the said notice has been published and served as by law required; and hearing had on said petition pursuant to said notice; and the said County Board of said County have heretofore duly appointed a competent engineer, to-wit, C. H. Martz to make a survey of said ditch.

Now Therefore, We, the County Board of said County, at a special session held this day, do hereby appoint Gunnard Lindquist and E. O. Gigstad and Otto Zaiser, three resident freeholders of said County, who are not interested in the construction of said proposed work, and not of kin to any of the parties known to be interested therein, to be viewers of said proposed work and of the route thereof. The said viewers shall first take an oath to faithfully perform their duties as such viewers; and thereafter, having received a certified copy of the petition for said ditch and of the order appointing them such viewers and of the order of the County Auditor of said County designating the time and place of the first meeting of said viewers, shall meet at the time and place specified, in the order of the County Auditor aforesaid and shall proceed to view said proposed work, and the land damaged or benefitted thereby; and, having completed said view and examination of said work, shall make and file their report thereof with said County Auditor of said County within thirty days from the date of their first meeting. In said report they shall in tabular form give the names of the owners of each tract of land to be benefitted or damaged by said proposed work, the description of each tract of land so benefitted or damaged (said names of owners to be the same as appear on the County tax duplicates of said County, and the description to be given in legal form), and the total number of acres in each of said tracts, the estimated number of acres in each tract of land to be benefitted or damaged (as the case may be), the number of acres added to any tract by the total or partial drainage of any meandered lake, or the change of any water course and the location and value of such added land; the damage, if any, to riparian rights pertaining to any tract, and the amount that each tract of land will be benefitted or damaged by the construction of said work. In case said ditch drains, either in whole or in part, any public or corporate road or railroad, or benefits any such roads so that the roadbed or traveled track of any such road will be made better by the construction of said ditch, said viewers shall estimate the benefits arising therefrom to said road, roadbeds or railroads, and report said benefits, together with the names of roads and others particulars necessary to identfy the corporations, private or public, to be benefitted thereby, and amounts of benefits to each; they shall report as part of such tabular statement the damages awarded to each municipal or other corporation for injury to any road or roadbed, and from the necessary construction and maintenance of any bridge, culverts or other works rendered necessary by the establishment of such ditch, stating the same separately. They shall also report the total estimated benefits in respect to said ditch entire, and branches thereof, if any, and also whether or not, in their opinion, the estimated expense of the construction of said ditch including the damages assessed therefor, is greater than the utility of said proposed ditch; and whether or not said proposed ditch, is impracticable for any reasons, and if so, stating the reason why it should not be constructed. In making said view and survey of said proposed work and their report thereon, the said viewers shall proceed according to Chapter 230 of the General Laws of 1905.

TERRORS OF THE JUNGLE

The Mosquitoes of Africa Are Worse Than the Lions.

"The African mosquitoes intoxicate you. They inject so much poison into you that you are dazed, your eyes roll and you stagger and speak thickly. In a word, you're drunk," said a missionary.

"In the Nyassa country I'd always start getting ready for bed and the mosquitoes an hour before sunset. I'd set up my mosquito net with the utmost care. I'd clamp down its edges with valises and boxes. I'd light inside it three green wood fires, filling it with a bitter smoke that all insects are supposed to loathe.

"Finally I'd get in myself. I'd smoke big pipes of the black native tobacco, and I'd long miserably in that hot, smoky atmosphere for the dawn.

"Despite all my precautions quite 200 or 300 mosquitoes would get inside my net as soon as darkness fell. They were like a whirlwind in there. It couldn't have been worse. Their noise and their nipping made me feverish—made me really delirious at times.

"At last, in exhaustion, I'd get a few hours of troubled sleep, awakening for breakfast drunk from the poison injected by hundreds of tiny needles into my veins.

"No; it isn't the elephants or the giraffes that trouble the African hunter, but the skeeters."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

MISSED ONE POINT.

The Lady Told Him What More He Could Have Said.

"I am going to tell you the truth about yourself," he said.

"Go on," said the young and ambitious actress.

"I have in my time had rare opportunities to observe beautiful, graceful and talented women, and I violate no confidence in saying that you are the queen of them all. You unite in your lovely person that peculiar magnetism which lays audiences at your feet. Your genius, shining through all the deficiencies of stagecraft, enables you to triumph over every obstacle. So supreme are you that you have the right to rise above all conventionalities, to marry, to love, to discard whom you please, and no one will dare to criticise. Your work will live. You are the very personification of the highest art. United with this your perfection of beauty gives you the just title to a lasting fame."

"Is all that true?" she asked softly.

"Absolutely. Would you have me say more? What more could I say?"

She sighed.

"You might," she answered, "have mentioned my clothes and my figure."—Puck.

Disinterested.

Lord Monboddo, an eminent member of the Scotch judiciary and one of the clear cut figures in Boswell's immortal "Life of Johnson," was a great beau in his youth and in his later years a brilliant and learned if whimsical man.

He was a friend of the Garricks and one day was their guest at their villa at Hampton Court when Hannah More was also visiting there. They were walking together in the garden when his lordship astonished the fair and sprightly Hannah by a declaration of love and an offer of his heart and hand. Meeting with a positive refusal, he soon returned to the house and made a clean breast of it to Mrs. Garrick.

"I am very sorry for this refusal," he said in conclusion. "I should have liked so much to teach that nice girl Greek."

A Skeleton In Every Closet.

The expression "There is a skeleton in every closet" is said to have its origin in the fact that a soldier once wrote to his mother, who complained of her unhappiness, to have some sewing done for him by some one who had no cares or troubles. At last the mother found a woman who seemed to have no troubles, but when she told her business the woman took her to a closet containing a skeleton and said: "Madam, I try to keep my troubles to myself, but every night I am compelled by my husband to kiss this skeleton, who was once his rival. Think you, then, I can be happy?"

Alphabetical Time.

An English firm, Higgins & Dodd, finding that there were twelve letters in their name, placed a great clock over their door with the letters on its face instead of numerals.

They waited anxiously for days, weeks, hoping for some return, but not a soul took notice of the clock. At last, amid excitement behind the office window, a man was seen to halt in the street and gaze at the clock, puzzled.

Slowly he came to the door, entered and drawled, "Say, is it half past Higgins or a quarter to Dodd?"—T. P.'s Weekly.

Her Bargain.

Wife—Oh, this is awful! These curtains I got at the bargain sale don't match our furniture. Hubby—Return 'em. Wife—I should say not—cheap as I got them? We must have some new furniture at once!—Cleveland Leader.

The Hero.

"So Biggins has written a historical novel?"

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne.

"Who is the hero of the book?"

"The man who has undertaken to publish it."—Washington Star.

Men Who Cheat Themselves.

I have known employees actually to work harder in scheming, shirking, trying to keep from working hard in the performance of their duties, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine, than they would have worked if they had tried to do their best and had given the largest, the most liberal service possible to their employers. The hardest work in the world is that which is grudgingly done. The youth who is always haggling over the question of how many dollars and cents he will sell his services for little realizes how he is cheating himself by not looking at the larger salary he can pay himself in increasing his skill, in expanding his experience and in making himself a better, stronger, more useful man.

EXAMPLE.

WE scatter seeds with careless hand
And dream we ne'er shall see them more,
But for a thousand years
Their fruit appears
In weeds that mar the land
Or healthful store.

THE deeds we do, the words we say,
Into still air they seem to fleet.
We count them ever past,
But they shall last—
In the dread judgment they
And we shall meet.

I CHARGE thee by the years gone by,
For the love's sake of brethren dear,
Keep thou the one true way,
In work and play,
Lest in that world their cry
Of woe thou hear.

—John Keble.

THE STAR IN THE WEST.

I SAW a bright star shining out in the west—
A diadem bound on the brow of the sky—
A beacon, it seemed, in the home of the blest
To guide the poor toilers of earth to a rest
In a land where no sorrow can burden the breast
And all that is true cannot die.

And it seemed that the angels were guarding its fires,
Directing its beams to the mortals below,
Whose hope for a haven of refuge inspires
With courage to carry each cross, though it tires
And burdensome grows ere the moment expires
For release from all bondage and woe.

Beholding with rapture that glorious star,
It seemed that I heard the faint rush of a wing
As it passed by my soul and upward afar
It swept to the portals of heaven, ajar,
Swept on to that land where the glorified are Triumphant o'er death and its sting.

And then I remembered that tear bedimmed eyes
Of millions had gazed on those radiant beams
In ages now dead since humanity's ties
Were sundered by man, all regardless of sighs
Of brothers oppressed, and who blindly denies
The love of the one who redeems.

Then sinking adown the far fields of the west
The star that entranced me grew faint to my sight,
Till 'neath the horizon it went to its rest—
But not the sad heart that sank low in my breast—
And left me alone, all unhappy, unblest,
Unshrived in the darkness of night.

—S. S. Lewis.

The Laborer and His Hire.

At a conference in New York of foreign missions boards reference was made to the increased cost of living of missionaries home on leave, which made it harder for them to get along than if they stayed in their foreign field of labor.

"Why," said the speaker, "a missionary must travel decently, and that reminds me of a story of Mr. Spurgeon and a fellow clergyman. The two were just starting on a railway journey and Mr. Spurgeon's friend showed him a second class ticket.

"'See,' said he, 'what good care I take of the Lord's money.'

"'See,' said Mr. Spurgeon, bringing out a first class ticket, 'what good care I take of the Lord's servant.'"—Youth's Companion.

THE GOULDS

A STUDY OF AN AMERICAN FAMILY.

By ELIZABETH MERIWETHER GILMER

COPYRIGHT BY INTERNATIONAL MAGAZINE COMPANY

MRS GOULD AND MISS GLORIA

WE LEARN from the scientists of the census bureau and others who have made a study of that interesting but erratic bird, the stork, that its favorite habitat is in the cottages of the poor rather than in the palaces of the rich, and that in no other place in the world is it more seldom seen than along Fifth avenue.

GEORGE J. GOULD, JR.

MISS VIVIAN GOULD

MISS MARJORIE GOULD

KINGDON GOULD

THE MISSES EDITH AND GLORIA

The home of Mr. George J. Gould, however, is an exception to this rule. Seven times the domestic bird has visited and blessed that abode, each time leaving a baby so strong and lusty, so big and beautiful, that it fully justified the fond parents' declaration that it was the finest child ever born. Better still, the Gould children have grown up to be almost perfect specimens of physical health, and they are so intelligent and so natural and unaffected in character that it seems worth while to tell how this result has been accomplished, and how a wise father and mother have enabled their children to lead the simple life in the midst of millions and a luxury that makes that of the fabled Sybarites look like a makeshift with which one could get along if one had to.

When you want to dive to the heart of a mystery the French shrug their shoulders and spread out their hands, and say: "Cherchez la femme." If you desire to find the key to any family situation and know why the children of the household are what they are—virile or weakly, sturdy little men and women or flabby jellyfish, potential citizens of worth or mere cumberers of the ground—you must act as if the old French adage read: "Cherchez la mere."

It is the mother that counts where children are concerned, and so I sought out Mrs. George J. Gould, and asked her for her recipe for bringing up a family. I found her in their magnificent suite of apartments at the Plaza hotel, surrounded, like Cornelia, by her jewels. There was her daughter Marjorie, a lovely, slim slip of a girl, one of the debutantes and belles of the season, come in to tell of the delights of the ball of the night before. There was Edith, a sturdy little miss of seven, hanging upon her mother's shoulder. There was George, a shy lad of 12, poking his head in between the portieres from time to time. The other children were absent, and a motor was being sent to her school for Vivian, and another to Columbia university for Kingdon and Jay, for the day was bitter cold and snowy. Baby Gloria, who is only two and a half years old, was spending the winter at Georgian Court with her grandmother, and trinkets were being got ready to send to her there.

The room itself was a very temple of motherhood, for its empire tone had been ruthlessly sacrificed before family affection and love of things homelike, and everywhere on walls and mantles and tables there were photographs of the children—Jay in tennis flannels when he won the championship of the world, Kingdon with his first mustache, marvelously like a young edition of the kaiser, Marjorie in her debutante gown, and baby pictures innumerable.

In the midst of all this evidence of a mother's brooding love sat Mrs. Gould, a radiant figure in trailing pale-blue silk, as young looking almost as her own daughter, and I thought that if I were an artist I should like to paint her as a triumphant modern Madonna, a woman to whom motherhood has brought nothing but joy, and whose children are her crown of happiness. She has had all that women crave, has this woman who is a darling of the gods. First she had success and fame, which she won by her own genius; then she was given love and marriage and enormous wealth and high social position. She has beauty that is still undimmed, but the best that life has given her is her children, and it is good to hear her say so.

"My acquaintances have sometimes pitied me," she said with a smile, "because I have had so many babies, but I have not one child too many. I have never had a child that I did not want, or that has not found a warm welcome waiting for it. I think that is one reason why my children have all been so strong and have had such serene dispositions.

"I have felt the responsibilities of motherhood, too, and have tried to give my children as good a start as possible by giving them sound bodies. Before they were born I took every care of my own health and lived as much as possible in the open air. Before Edith was born I spent months on our yacht cruising around, as it was summer, in fact, she was born at sea. Then I have nursed my babies myself, except twice when illness rendered it impossible for me to do so. I do not believe in sterilized milk nor patent baby-foods. A baby is like a little puppy. If you want it to grow fine and strong and fat, you must give it the right start, and nothing has yet been discovered that takes the place of the food that nature intended for a child.

"In raising my children my plan has been to bring them up to be simple and hardy. Not one of my children has ever had on a stitch of flannel, not even a flannel petticoat. They have warm wraps when they go out of doors, but in the house they wear little socks and low-necked and short-sleeved cotton or woolen clothes. They live also on the simplest and plainest food—cereals and eggs, tender steaks and good roast meat, with plenty of vegetables and fruit, and the simplest sort of dessert when they have any at all. No pies and pastry, and no nibbling at candy all day for them. I also put great stress on absolute regularity in eating, and no matter who else waits, the children have their meals exactly on the stroke of the clock.

"We are a very domestic family, and the children have their breakfast and lunch, which is really their dinner, with Mr. Gould and myself, but until they are 16 years old they have their supper at a little after six o'clock, and only have something very light to eat. They never come to dinner, unless upon their birthdays it is permitted as a great treat. Why, Marjorie never came to dinner regularly until last year, and she is still so attached to the nursery tea that when we are down at Georgian Court she often eats with the children by preference.

"Of course I have so many other duties that it is not possible for me to be always with my babies, and so I kept a trained nurse for each one until he or she was two and a half years old, and past the teething-time; but there is never a night, even to this day, that I do not go into each room the last thing before going to bed, and tuck the covers down with my own hands, good and tight around each child. And I have nursed every one of my children with my own hands when they were sick. I had trained nurses, of course, but I sat up with the sick child, too. When Marjorie had that fearful spell of scarlet fever in France the summer before last, and when it seemed utterly impossible for her to recover, her father and I never left her day or night for weeks. The doctors said that it was the most malignant case they ever saw, and that nothing but her marvelous strength pulled her through. They said that if she had been a French girl she certainly would have died.

"I believe that the chief thing about raising children up to be well and strong is to bring them up in the country where they can have plenty of fresh air and room for exercise, and freedom. It was for the benefit of our children that we went down to Lakewood and built Georgian Court. The second floor of the house is devised especially for the children, and the sunniest room in it is for the baby and the next sunniest for the ex-baby; and we's always had great times and ceremonies when the reigning monarch had to give way for a new king or queen of the nursery and have his or her little belongings packed up and moved on.

"Everything has been sacrificed for the good of the children. For ten years we lived at Georgian Court only in the winter, and took the babies every summer up to the quietest and dullest little place in the world in the Catskills, ten miles from anywhere.

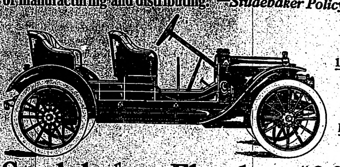
"At Georgian Court we provided every sort of diversion for our children to encourage them in athletic sports. We have a polo-ground, and a riding-ring, and tennis and squash-courts, and the children have their ponies and ride and drive a great deal. The boys were particularly interested in polo, and Kingdon, my oldest son, at 15 was considered one of the best polo-players in the country. Jay was also a fine player, but after Kingdon went to Columbia the game was somewhat broken up; so as there was a fine professional tennis-player at Lakewood he took up court tennis instead. It is a game that requires unusual strength and quickness of motion, but he soon became so expert at it that when he was 17 he won the American championship, and when he was 18 he carried off the English championship, which is, of course, the championship of the world.

MRS GOULD AND THE MISSES EDITH AND GLORIA

"Neither Mr. Gould nor myself is an advocate of boarding-schools. We believe that the very best associations that children can have during the formative years of their lives are home associations, and that no guardianship is equal to the loving watchfulness of a father and mother. Therefore we have kept our children right in the home nest, and have had them educated by tutors and governesses.

"In educating the children we have tried to develop each one along the line of his or her own natural bent. For instance, Marjorie adores reading, particular poetry and romance. She is a good musician and, as I said, speaks four languages; but she does not care for what you might call the drudgery of study, and I have not afflicted her with it. But Vivian has a profound mind. She loves to study and to delve into deep subjects.

"I am very proud of my two big boys. They are clever, and they are strong, manly boys, and best of all, in a mother's eyes, they are good boys. Neither of them has ever caused me a moment's uneasiness or a single heart-pang. Kingdon is 21 and Jay is 20, and neither of them smokes or has ever tasted liquor. Not that I am a prohibitionist at all, or have ever tried especially to keep such things away from them, but they just have no desire for stimulants. And that, I take it, is about the best indication of their health and strength as well as a vindication of my method of raising children, for after all, it's the healthy body that gives a healthy mind and healthy impulses, isn't it?"



"Divide with the buyer the saving we effect by our superior methods of manufacturing and distributing."—Studebaker Policy 55 years old.

Studebaker-Flanders "20"—$750

The Greatest Automobile Value the World Has Ever Seen

HERE'S THE ANNOUNCEMENT for which the world of Automobilia has been waiting so anxiously—hoping or dreading according as the individual was a buyer or seller of motor cars.

WE HAD INTENDED KEEPING SILENT about this car for a few weeks yet—until other makers had had their say—until they had all sprung their "sensations."

BUT THE MAGNITUDE OF OUR PREPARATIONS—the purchase of several factories by Studebaker interests as represented by the E-M-F Company of Detroit set trade tongues a-wagging and information as to the car that was to be produced on such a tremendous scale began to leak out.

DEALERS, ANXIOUS TO GET THE WINNING LINE began to inquire as to the Studebaker plans for next year. They were insistent, for, very naturally, they did not want to tie up with any other concern if Studebakers were to have the great line that had been reported. No man likes to enlist on the losing side. All like to march with the Victorious.

CUSTOMERS EVERYWHERE WROTE in this vein: "If Studebakers are going to build a runabout I don't want to buy until I have seen it." Thousands of these writers have dealt with this old house for years—some of them never bought a vehicle anywhere else. To them the Studebaker name justly adds to the intrinsic value of any car.

IN VIEW OF THIS ANXIETY on the part of our friends we decided it would be unjust to dealers and prospective buyers to longer withhold information as to this car, which will supplement those other two incomparable models, Studebaker-Garford "40" and Studebaker E-M-F "30."

SO THE CAT IS OUT Read the specifications briefly given below. Consider the source of this car's origin. Then compare it with other "Sensations" recently announced—and see if you don't think they were false alarms.

STUDEBAKER-FLANDERS "20" is the name of the new car, and the title was selected because it was believed that that alone would be the strongest guarantee of its quality to any one at all familiar with the history and the personnel of the automobile industry.

STUDEBAKERS STAND SPONSOR for the product—the entire output will be marketed through this organization. That is your guarantee that the car will be of sterling quality throughout—Studebakers could not afford to lend their name and a reputation based on 55 years of upright dealing to any but an honest product.

FLANDERS WILL MANUFACTURE this product. What could we say here that would add to his fame as a manufacturer? His has been the most wonderful record in this wonderful business. It has been a succession of triumphs—a repetition from year to year of feats in production that had theretofore been considered impossible—that other makers now call marvelous. E-M-F "30," which attained such an instantaneous success and now stands the most popular car on the market, was sufficient to establish Flanders for all time.

JAMES HEASLETT DESIGNED the Studebaker-Flanders "20"—an engineer who up to the time he undertook this commission had never set his hand nor his talent to the designing of any but high priced cars. Several of the best known emanated from his brain. He designed the original Studebaker chassis—the one from which have evolved all later models. Heaslett doesn't know how to do cheap work—in the sense that the term is generally used. He simplifies and he knows how to design parts to manufacture to the best advantage—there he is unsurpassed by any.

25,000 S-F "20's" WILL BE BUILT IN 1910 We realize that these figures will be almost incredible to persons unfamiliar with the resources of Studebakers and the ability of Flanders. It is a simple statement of fact. That the old "ultra conservative" house of Studebakers and not some young and inexperienced concern stands back of the statement ought to give it a par value. We know it will.

THIS QUANTITY WAS NECESSARY It would be impossible to produce a car of this size and quality at the price if made in smaller quantities. The tremendous "overhead" expense of equipment and distribution would, if saddled onto a lesser number of cars, make it necessary to add 25 to 50 per cent. to the price. We cannot build a much better car than others do for the money in lots of 3,000 to 5,000. But by distributing the overhead over 25,000 cars we have been able to set the price at $750.

COMPARE THIS CAR WITH OTHERS listed at $100 to $300 more. Add a magneto to those not so equipped—we believe no automobile is complete without a first class magneto—and you will find that, aside from the difference in price, there is no comparison in value. We didn't intend there should be.

THIS IS A FULL GROWN, MAN'S SIZE magneto equipped, four cylinder car—not a four cylinder toy or a one-lung makeshift.

WE HAVE HAD IT IN MIND SEVERAL YEARS under way several months—simply waited until plans could be matured for its proper manufacture and distribution. No concern would dare attempt a task so large as this until proper machinery not only for making but for marketing the product had been perfected and installed. That time has arrived.

THE DEMAND IS ALREADY THERE this we know. It only remained to perfect an organization to properly take care of it and to extend to buyers that uniform courtesy and prompt attention that have made Studebakers famous—and prosperous. Did you ever notice that a Studebaker representative, wherever you find him, breathes the spirit of the whole organization, is a sort of beacon of safety to all Studebaker patrons? Well, it's a fact. It's the way we stand back of them—treat them as we want their customers treated. They soon get the spirit.

THE BEST BRAINS IN THE INDUSTRY are engaged in the production of the Studebaker-Flanders "20." Plants best suited to its manufacture have been purchased—for if we would avoid all chance of delays and disappointments to buyers we must depend on no outside concern to furnish the smallest part. Every part must be made in our own factories and under the watchful eye of Flanders.

TO MAKE THE LOW PRICE POSSIBLE it was necessary also that there enter in no intermediate parts profit. No concern making an assembled car can hope to compete with this car in quality at the price. It was the purchase of several plants—among them the splendidly equipped De Luxe factory at Detroit, a forging plant, a body making plant, and others—that started the rumors and make it necessary to announce our plans a few weeks earlier than intended. It suits us all right—but—

OUT OF CONSIDERATION FOR COMPETITORS we intended to keep silent yet a while. Deliveries will not begin until January. Besides, we realized that the announcement of such a car at such a price, and by Studebakers, is likely to have the effect of an explosive bomb on the market at this time. We had no desire to precipitate anything, but our hand was forced.

"THIS CAR WILL BE THE SCREAM OF 1910" said the first dealer who was let into the secret, and if dealers can't pick winners who can?

IT WILL BE A REPETITION OF E-M-F "30" HISTORY the greatest sensation—the greatest success from every standpoint ever sprung in this industry up to date.

OF COURSE IT WILL BE DAMNED by rivals. But damning doesn't hurt. No car ever was damned as was the E-M-F "30," now known as Studebaker E-M-F "30." They said we would never be able to make them at the price—we did. Then they said deliveries would be delayed—shipping 45 a day now—4,500 in hands of owners. Damning doesn't hurt, for they never damn dead ones.

STUDEBAKERS ARE THE WORLD'S LARGEST makers of motor cars—many times over. Yet we cannot hope to supply the whole demand. And as cars sold under the Studebaker name are always first choice, persons who are unable to get them and must buy some other are naturally disappointed—and often sore.

THERE IS CERTAIN TO BE A SHORTAGE of every Studebaker model in 1910. We know that now, but are powerless to avert it. Under the Studebaker name 41,600 cars, gasoline alone, will be made in 1910. That sounds big, but this is a big country and the name stands high over every mile of it.

ONLY 1,000 STUDEBAKER-GARFORDS America's standard high priced car—have been planned for. Of the latest model, not yet publicly announced, nearly 200 are already under order. For several weeks we have been aware that there will be a big shortage of this model, but it is too late to change plans now. The only thing for you, if you want a car of that type—seven passenger, $4,000, with standard body—is to get your order in now—have a definite delivery date set.

"DIVIDE WITH THE BUYER the saving we effect by our superior method of manufacture and selling." That is the keynote to all Studebaker operations—the explanation of our policy of small profits per unit on quantities of cars. No other manufacturer is satisfied with so small a margin. Most of them do not know, within several dollars, what it costs to make an automobile—and they set a wide margin to cover.

YOU HAVE BEEN PAYING FOR WASTEFUL METHODS ever since the inception of this young industry. We have corrected that. This is an industry now—not a game.

STUDEBAKERS, WITH ALL THEIR RESOURCES financial and otherwise, would have hesitated to launch a project as big as Studebaker-Flanders "20" under the conditions which until within a few months have prevailed in the automobile industry—or rather Game. The basis on which the business has been conducted was foolish, fictitious and false. It was fair neither to maker nor buyer—most unfair to the dealer. He was always chasing rainbows. Tying up with one wild-cat concern after another, he never handled the same line two years in succession—never knew where, a year afterward, to find any one to stand back of the so-called "guarantee" he had given with the car.

HOW DIFFERENT NOW when you can buy any type of car your needs dictate or your purses can afford and have behind it the warranty and the name of a concern like Studebakers—fifty-five years old. This latest creation—Studebaker-Flanders "20"—completes the line. Here are brief specifications. Read them carefully; then if you desire further information about this or any other Studebaker model write your nearest branch. Whatever you do, get your order in—or be sorry because you can't get a car for next spring's use, when you will want it badly.

SENT THROUGH AIR

Big Ocean Liners Get Weather Reports While at Sea.

London.—In the meteorological committee's annual report to the lords of the treasury, issued recently, reference is made to the weather reports received by wireless telegraphy from American liners since the commencement of the year

Seventy-eight messages were received in January, 469 in February and 672 in March, making a total for the three months of 1,210 reports.

Of these, 67, or five per cent., arrived at the meteorological office within two hours of the time at which the observations were taken, or sufficiently early to be of service in connection with the weather map in current use, and 223 messages, or 18 per cent. of the total number, arrived within 24 hours of the time of observations

Toward the close of the quarter there were, however, indications of a sensible reduction in the time occupied in the transmission of messages

At present the arrangements for the transmission of messages by radio-telegraphy are not sufficiently developed for messages to be transmitted directly from ships to shore stations from every part of the Atlantic

For the more western portions of the map the committee is dependent upon the transmission of messages from ship to ship and then to the shore The ship carrying the message has frequently to wait some time before it comes within speaking distance of the shore station and in consequence considerable delay occurs in the transmission

The faster ships tend to become the receiving vessels for messages of all ships which they have passed en route, with the result that the signal officer on board the ships and the staff at the office find themselves in possession of an overwhelming number of messages, some of which a. already too old to be of immediate utility in forecasting

The accuracy of the transmission has been remarkable and the observations have been good Many of the ships carry only aneroid barometers and in some instances it has been difficult to bring pressure observations into correspondence with those on a neighboring ship or the shore stations This, therefore, says the committee, remains to be done before the system of reports by radio-telegraphy from the Atlantic can be brought into a position to give a daily map of the ocean.

BLIND BOY RESCUES BROTHER

Directed to Drowning Lad by Cries for Help from Youngster and Others on Shore.

Yeadon, Pa.—Henry Gilbert, 12 years old, and blind, leaped into a deep pool at Baird's quarry and saved his ten-year-old brother John from drowning The swimming pool is very deep and has a dangerous, rocky bottom

A dozen boys from Pascal, including the two Gilberts, went there for a swim. Henry, who had lost his eyesight in a Fourth of July celebration, is an expert swimmer and diver, while John is but a beginner.

Henry had dressed when John decided to have a last dive and leaped far into the pool. He reappeared 40 feet from shore and called for help. Fully dressed, the blind brother plunged into the pool and swam straight for John, directed by the latter's voice. Before he reached the spot the struggling boy had sunk. Henry searched about for him in vain, calling to the boys on shore to guide him.

Then John came to the surface some distance behind him. Henry heard him struggling in the water and swam straight for the spot. Again he was too late, but when John came to the surface a third time the blind boy was close at hand and seized him by the hair. Then, directed by the shouts on shore, he swam slowly toward them, holding fast to his brother. Other boys waded into the water as far as they could and helped him ashore.

Henry was little the worse for his experience, but John was unconscious and it required long rubbing to bring him to his senses.

Cook Loses $27,000 Bonus.

London.—One of the London newspapers says:

It may be hoped for his own sake that Cook's success will be a source of wealth to him, but he must learn to be a business man now. For his first telegram he received by cable $3,000, with the words: "Never have I paid remuneration with greater pleasure," but immediately afterward he received an offer of $30,000 for the first message. This little experience, by which he lost $27,000, made Cook more cautious, and before he closed his contract for his book, he thought the matter over carefully.

Will Give Life to Science

Kansas Man Willing to Die to Prove Austrian Scientist's Claim of Elixir of Life.

South Norwalk, Conn.—Thaddeus Tietze, the Austrian scientist, who stirred the world by declaring that he had at last discovered an elixir of life by which he could bring the dead back to life, has secured a subject who is willing to submit himself to the experiment. This man is G W. Reese of Kansas City, Mo., who writes that under certain financial conditions he will submit himself for the experiment. Prof. Tietze has wired that he will accept the conditions. Reese only wanted a demonstration of the power of the elixir of life on an animal and then he would place himself on the hands of the professor to be killed and resurrected for the sum of $1,000.

Prof. Tietze recently came into a big estate in his own country, from which he was banished because of his advanced ideas If no subject is secured, Prof Tietze is so confident that he intends to submit the treatment to other hands and himself become the subject. He also has plans to form a large stock company and build an institution for the perfection and application of his discovery

His contention is that any animal that died an unnatural death can be resuscitated within five hours of the time that respiration ceased. He buries his subject in a compound and creates a new life.

August Corn Exports Large

Total of Other Foodstuffs Shipped from United States Less Than That of Year Ago.

Washington.—Double the amount of corn was exported from the United States in August over that month a year ago. The exports of wheat and wheat flour were only half as large last month as they were in August a year ago, according to a statement of the bureau of statistics of the department of commerce and labor, issued recently

There was a decrease of more than $10,000,000 in the value of exports of domestic breadstuffs, meat and dairy products, food animals, cotton and mineral oils from the United States in August, compared with August a year ago, and a decrease of $94,000,000 for the eight months ending August 31, compared with the corresponding period of last year.

The total value of these exports for last August was [illegible] divided as follows: Corn, $591,984; wheat, $6,338,470; wheat flour, $3,277,861; all other foodstuffs, $628,778; meat and dairy products, $9,595,164; cattle, hogs and sheep, $895,949; cotton, $7,162,724, and mineral oil, $7,629,184.

For the eight month period ending with August the value of these exports was $431,940,924, every article showing a decrease except corn and cotton.

HAY FEVER KILLED BY RAIN

Air, Usually Filled with Pollen Dust Thrown Off by Plants, Washed This Summer.

London.—An unusual freedom from hay fever this summer has been one of the results of the abnormally wet season.

"Normally at the close of the harvesting season," said a West End throat specialist, "I see numbers of annual sufferers from this complaint. Whether hay fever is a nervous affection or is caused by heredity, gouty tendencies, indigestion or some abnormality in the nose, it is generally agreed that the pollen dust which various plants and grasses throw off during the summer months is the active initial cause of the attack

"In an ordinary summer the air is filled with these floating, almost invisible pollen grains, which, when breathed into the nose, may bring on hay fever. But the continuous rains this year have washed the air clean of this pollen dust."

FARMERS HUNT HOBO

General Nuisance All Over Agricultural Portion of State.

Pestiferous Tourists Are Forced to Hike Through Corn and Grain Fields to Escape Angry South Dakota Citizens.

At this time of the year thousands of hobos, drawn to the state with the great influx of honest harvest hands, spread all over the agricultural portion of the state and make themselves a general nuisance to the people, especially of the smaller towns, where there is little police protection

The tourists of the road are unusually bold and think nothing of virtually taking possession of freight trains entering the state and by sheer force of numbers intimidating train crews. It is nothing uncommon for as many as 100 hobos to ride on a single train coming into South Dakota, refusing to pay fare or to leave the train until they reach their destination

They then take possession of shady nooks adjacent to the smaller towns and prove themselves a great annoyance to housewives by their frequent trips in search of "hand-outs" Convenient chicken coops also are raided by them at night, many residents of the outskirts of towns losing practically all their chickens at the hands of the tourists

Patience sometimes ceases to be a virtue, and then the angry male residents of the towns set out on a hobo chase and clear the disturbers from the district. At Aberdeen recently 150 tramps were rounded up at one time and driven from the town.

One of the most exciting chases of the season took place at Lesterville, a small town in Yankton county. Forty hobos gathered at that place and the citizens paid little attention to them until they had robbed several stores of small articles.

To meet the situation the Commercial club was called in special session to consider the matter, and after much discussion as to arresting the strangers and placing them upon a diet of bread and water it finally was decided to arm with heavy clubs all the legal voters of the precinct and start a hunt for the undesirables and drive them out of the community.

As soon as the word could be passed around town the forces were marshaled together and a forward movement commenced all along the line. The tramps needed little or no explanation of what was intended. Their scouts evidently had carefully noted the unusual activity among the townspeople, and no sooner had the skirmishers appeared in the vicinity of the hobo retreat than the tramps emerged from their shady nooks and started on a dead run for cornfields surrounding the town.

So enthusiastic were the hunters and so exciting the sport that the chase was continued far into the surrounding country, and corn and grain fields for miles around were carefully traversed in the search for the human quarry. By nightfall there were no hobos within miles of Lesterville. During the hunt those who were unfortunate enough to come within reach of the hunters were severely beaten, and for many days will carry the marks inflicted by the heavy clubs in the hands of their pursuers.

The man hunt was so successful that it has been decided by the male residents of Lesterville to repeat it twice a week during the remainder of the season, or until all tramps have learned to give their town a wide berth. Other towns which are afflicted with the tramp nuisance may adopt similar stringent measures to rid the towns of the undesirables.

Kidney Disease Shows Many Painful and Unpleasant Symptoms.

George S. Crowell, 1109 Broadway, Helena, Mont., says: "I was troubled with a disordered condition of the kidneys, some backache and irregular passages of secretions. At times I was obliged to get up out of bed at night, and the urine was unnatural in appearance. On the advice of a friend I procured Doan's Kidney Pills and began using them. This remedy helped me at once, strengthened my kidneys and corrected the disordered condition."

HUMOR BURNED AND ITCHED.

Eczema on Hand, Arms, Legs and Face—It Was Something Terrible.

Complete Cure by Cuticura.

"About fifteen or eighteen years ago eczema developed on top of my hand. It burned and itched so much that I was compelled to show it to a doctor. He pronounced it ringworm. After trying his different remedies the disease increased and went up my arms and to my legs and finally on my face. The burning was something terrible. I went to another doctor who had the reputation of being the best in town. He told me it was eczema. His medicine checked the advance of the disease, but no further. I finally concluded to try the Cuticura Remedies and found relief in the first trial. I continued until I was completely cured from the disease, and I have not been troubled since. C. Mustn't Work Like Roebottom.

F. W. Ayer, the advertising agent, at the dinner in Philadelphia in honor of the firm's fortieth anniversary, said that to succeed in advertising required hard work.

"The successes in this business are stupendous," he said, "but some folks think that working as Roebottom of Camden worked, a man can build up a great advertising fortune.

"Roebottom was a roofer. He was engaged on a Mickle street house. One day, as he was lunching, he was heard to give a yell of pain.

"'What's the matter, Roebottom?' a carpenter asked.

"'I got a nail in my foot,' the roofer answered.

"'Well, why don't you pull it out?' said the carpenter.

"'What! In my dinner hour?' yelled Roebottom, reproachfully."—Philadelphia Record.

They Didn't Have to Change.

During the years in which our pure food laws have been put into effect there has been a great hurrying and scurrying on the part of the food manufacturers to change their methods to make them conform to the law.

The Quaker Oats Company is a conspicuous exception. It was admitted that Quaker Oats was as pure and clean as possible and that it was an ideal food.

It is so cheap that any one can afford it and so nourishing that everyone needs it. The result of last year's experiments at Yale and other points where food values were tested is that Quaker Oats has been adopted by many persons as their food on which they rely for adding vigor and endurance of muscle and brain.

The Quaker Oats Company meets all demands in the way it packs Quaker Oats; regular size packages and the large size family package; the latter, both with and without china. 4

PAINT FAULTS.

It is a common occurrence nowadays to hear a man remark with disgust: "It is impossible to have good painting done these days; either the paint is not good or there are no good painters." This, however, is not true. There is good paint, and there are good painters. But the question is, bringing them together.

One cannot expect a satisfactory painting job without pure white lead. There is a way to make sure you are getting pure white lead without testing it. See that the keg bears National Lead Company's famous Dutch Boy Painter trademark, which is a positive guarantee of purity. However, anyone can test white lead. National Lead Company, 1902 Trinity Bldg., New York City, will send you a lead tester and painter's outfit, consisting of book of color schemes, specifications, etc., upon request.

Ring of Chinese "Grafters."

Prince Ching, head of the foreign department of the Chinese government, is pictured as an eminent oriental grafter by the Peking correspondent of the London Times, who writes: "Since the downfall of Yuan Shih-kai the Wai-wu-pu (foreign office) has relapsed into its former state of incapacity, and for this Prince Ching is to blame. Amiable but corrupt, he has stood for a generation for all that is worst in Chinese officialdom. All stories of his rapacity, his greed, his unscrupulous sales of office, his indifference to the affairs of state. His wealth is enormous, yet no generous or charitable action has ever been recorded in his favor. Every new minister in every office of emolument has to pay him toll."

Mars the Next Field.

There are many who will part from the north pole with regret. All their lives it has seemed the one unconquerable salient of nature's fortress, the very synonym of the impossible goal of human endeavor. With the pole itself succumbing, the world is no longer the same, and everything seems within the realm of mortal achievement. We must now think of talking with Mars with more respect. The professor's mirrors may prove any day a reality.

Laundry work at home would be much more satisfactory if the right Starch were used. In order to get the desired stiffness, it is usually necessary to use so much starch that the beauty and fineness of the fabric is hidden behind a paste of varying thickness, which not only destroys the appearance, but also affects the wearing quality of the goods. This trouble can be entirely overcome by using Defiance Starch, as it can be applied much more thinly because of its greater strength than other makes.

It Takes a $200,000 Plant
To Make "Gitche Gamee" Shoes

With a much smaller expenditure we could make a GOOD Shoe, but we are not satisfied with making merely a good shoe, WE MAKE THE BEST SHOE IT IS POSSIBLE TO MAKE—and that takes a big plant and a good plant.

THE MEN WHO MAKE THE "GITCHE GAMEE" are the best leather-workers that can be found in any shoe factory in the country. We know that THAT is the most important of all the many points that go to the making of good shoes. A poor workman cannot make a good shoe even out of the best materials, while a good workman will not attempt to make a good shoe out of anything else—it would damage his reputation for work of superior excellence.

THE LEATHER USED IN "GITCHE GAMEES" is the best that we can purchase; we use sole leather throughout for heels, soles, counters and toe-boxes, because of its greater wearing qualities "GITCHE GAMEES" are made of ALL LEATHER, no shoddy excuses find a place in the factory of the Northern Shoe company.

THE APPLIANCES USED IN MAKING "GITCHE GAMEES" are the most modern and up-to-date. Even the best of workmen can only do their best work with the best tools, and we want our workmen's best work.

TO SUM UP—The most highly skilled workmen, the best leather obtainable and the most modern tools and machinery. THESE ARE THE THREE THINGS THAT MAKE THE "GITCHE GAMEE."

"GITCHE GAMEES" cost $4.00—get a pair from your local dealer and let them prove our claims ON YOUR FEET—that's the only way to thoroughly satisfy yourself.

The same high standard of quality will be found in every shoe of "NOSHCO-MAKE." When you purchase any of these shoes you get the BEST shoe of the kind that it is possible to make—

Ellingson, A. Hammarsten, Carl J. Olson, Martin Bozdek, Joe Schlehofer, Nils P. Now Therefore, We, the County Board of said County, at a special session held this day, do hereby appoint Gunnard Lindquist and K. O. Gigstad and Otto Zaiser, three resident freeholders of said County, who are not interested in the construction of said proposed work, and not of kin to any of the parties known to be interested therein, to be viewers of said proposed work and of the route thereof. The said viewers shall first take an oath to fathfully perform their duties as such viewers; and thereafter, having received a certified copy of the petition for said ditch and of the order appointing them such viewers and of the order of the County Auditor of said County designating the time and place of the first meeting of said viewers, shall meet at the time and place specified, in the order of the County Auditor aforesaid and shall proceed to view said proposed work, and the land damaged or benefitted thereby; and, having completed said view and examination of said work, shall make and file their report thereof with said County Auditor of said County within thirty days from the date of their first meeting. In said report they shall in tabular form give the names of the owners of each tract of land to be benefitted or damaged by said proposed work, the description of each tract of land so benefitted or damaged (said names of owners to be the same as appear on the County tax duplicates of said County, and the description to be given in legal form), and the total number of acres in each of said tracts, the estimated number of acres in each tract of land to be benefitted or damaged (as the case may be), the number of acres added to any tract by the total or partial drainage of any meandered lake, or the change of any water course and the location and value of such added land; the damage, if any, to riparian rights pertaining to any tract, and the amount that each tract of land will be benefitted or damaged by the construction of said work. In case said ditch drains, either in whole or in part, any public or corporate road or railroad, or benefits any such roads so that the roadbed or traveled track of any such road will be made better by the construction of said ditch, said viewers shall estimate the benefits arising therefrom to said road, roadbeds or railroads, and report said benefits, together with the names of roads and others particulars necessary to identify the corporations, private or public, to be benefitted thereby, and amounts of benefits to each; they shall report as part of such tabular statement the damages awarded to each municipal or other corporation for injury to any road or roadbed, and from the necessary construction and maintenance of any bridge, culverts or other works rendered necessary by the establishment of such ditch, stating the same separately. They shall also report the total estimated benefits in respect to said ditch entire, and branches thereof, if any, and also whether or not, in their opinion, the estimated expense of the construction of said ditch including the damages assessed therefor, is greater than the utility of said proposed ditch: and whether or not said proposed ditch is impracticable for any reasons, and if so, stating the reason why it should not be constructed. In making said view and survey of said proposed work and their report thereon, the said viewers shall proceed according to Chapter 230 of the General Laws of 1905.

PLEASANT JAILS.

The Way Prisoners In Montenegro Are Treated.

When I paid a visit to the Cetinj jail I found that all the prisoners were out for a walk. For two hours every morning and again for two hours in the afternoon they are allowed to wander about on the green before the prison. There is nothing, indeed, but their own sense of honor to prevent their going farther afield unless they be murderers, in which case they wear chains. The authorities provide them with housing, of course, and with clothes—not uniform—also with a fire at which to cook their food, and they give them fourpence a day each to buy it. The prisoners cater for themselves. Two of them go to the market every morning to buy provisions for the day. They are not required to work unless they choose, and they are classified not according to the seriousness of their offense, but according to their standard of life and general behavior. If a man of education and refinement is sent to prison, care is taken to lodge him, so far as possible, in a room where the other occupants belong to his own rank in life. I found on one bed a beautiful counterpane and a pillow covered with delicate embroidery. "Yes, poor fellow, that's his wife's handiwork," the governor of the jail remarked casually as we passed. In one prison life was made so easy and pleasant that on leaving, if I ventured to remark that to be there was no punishment, it seemed to me.

"No punishment!" the official who was with me exclaimed in surprise. "But think of the disgrace of being here. Is not that in itself punishment enough?"

I had and still have doubts on the subject, for I had just seen a cheery old fellow who, although the time for which he was sentenced had expired, stoutly refused to quit the prison.—Edith Sellers in Fortnightly Review.

THE PILLORY.

An English Writer's Reflections Upon Public Punishment.

Perhaps one of the few really democratic institutions ever created was the pillory. I do not say that it was a humane institution, though it was certainly more humane than our system of silent imprisonment. But being humane has nothing to do with being democratic. You may have humane and inhumane democracies, just as you may have humane and inhumane despots.

The point is that the pillory was a real appeal to the people. If it was cruel it was because the people were cruel or perhaps justly indignant. The people threw dead cats (the less humanitarian, I believe, threw live cats), but they could throw bouquets and crowns of laurel if they liked. Sometimes they did. The argument about the old public punishments cuts both ways. The publicity was an additional risk for the government as well as an additional risk for the prisoner, and this is specially true of the executions for treason. It was no small thing that half a million men might possibly treat as a martyr a man whom the king was treating as a murderer, that the prince had to concede to every obscure ruffian exactly what that ruffian probably wanted most—fame.—G. K. Chesterton in London News.

THE KANGAROO.

Its Hind Legs Are a Most Formidable Pair of Weapons.

The kangaroo seems poorly provided by nature with offensive weapons. His powers of biting are not formidable, and his fore paws are so weak as to seem almost rudimentary members of little use. His hind legs are muscular and strong, but are apparently of use only to assist flight from his enemies. On these hind legs is found, however, a most formidable weapon in the shape of a long claw as hard as steel and sharp as a chisel—as terrible to dogs as the scythe chariots of the ancients were to their enemies. When run down the kangaroo, placing a tree behind him to protect his rear, will seize in his fore paws such indiscreet dogs as rush up to him and, holding them firmly, disembowl them with a sweep of his sickle-like claws.

Even the hunters themselves thus caught in the viselike grip of an "old man" kangaroo of the larger breeds have sometimes suffered in like manner and have now and then taken their own turn at being hunted as the enraged animals turned upon them and attacked their horses with blind ferocity.—St. James' Gazette.

The Colossus of Rhodes.

The gigantic Colossus of Rhodes was one of the seven wonders of the world. It was erected in honor of the sun by Charles of Lindus, a disciple of Lysippus, and was thrown down by an earthquake about 224 B. C.

The figure stood upon two moles, a leg extended on each side of the harbor. A winding staircase led to the top of the figure, from out of the eyes of which were visible the coast of Syria and the ships sailing on the coast of Egypt. The colossi were the peculiar characteristic of eastern art and were of common occurrence, many of them being over sixty feet in height. The most celebrated is the statue of Memnos, on the plain of Thebes, described by the historian Strabo.

An Example of a Judicial Mind.

At a dinner attended by a score of well known lawyers recently the phrase "judicial mind" was defined by illustration as follows: "I have searched far and wide for a satisfactory definition of the inevitable query raised when judicial nominations are in sight," said one of the lawyers. "On a Mississippi river steamboat some time ago I obtained my only approximate answer. A southern colonel who employed the phrase yielded to my request for a definition and explained that on a certain occasion a legal light of Mississippi was traveling in a river steamer when the boiler exploded. As the boat was passing the penitentiary at the time the force of the explosion deposited the lawyer inside the walls of the establishment from which he had saved so many criminals. Being uninjured, as a clever lawyer would be under the circumstances, he applied to the warden for a release. The warden listened to the circumstances as he narrated them, but declined to release him, insisting that with the coming of prisoners he had no concern, but for their departure he was responsible. He therefore compelled the lawyer to wait for a pardon from the governor. That is my notion of a judicial mind."—New York Post.

RED LAKE COUNTY TAX LEVY RAISED

State Tax Commission Made Big Change in Assessments.

Personal Property Raised More Than One Hundred Thousand.

The state tax commission did things to personal property valuations in Red Lake county. The report of the commission showing how valuations in the county have been affected by the action of the state board has been received by Auditor Latendresse and shows an increase in the assessed valuation of personal property in the county of more than one hundred thousand dollars. The total value of personal property in the county as determined by the state board is $745,067, an increase of $109,699 over the amount reported by the county board of equalization.

There has been a reduction on the assessed valuation of just one item. Horses, mules and asses, one year old, are worth 10 per cent more than the county board of equalization said they were, so says the state board. BIG FIRE AT LENGBY

One Fataoity and Big Property Loss in the Small Village.

The little village of Lengby suffered a disastrous fire last Thursday, the greater portion of the business section of the town being burned. The loss is about $30,000 partly covered by insurance.

There was one fatality as a result of the fire. Simmie DeMarre, proprietor of the hotel at Lengby, died as the result of injuries received at the fire. DeMarre fell from the roof of one of the burning building, and he died at the Fosston hospital Friday morning as the result of injuries to his spine.

Meeting at City Hall Tuesday Evening, Oct. 16.

A meeting of the Grange association will be held at the city hall in Red Lake Falls Tuesday evening, Oct. 16. All farmers whether members of the association or not are urged to attend the meeting. Mr. Steffner from New York will speak.

Wold of Kuehnel, and Lars Rennestrand, of Torgerson, commenced Monday morning to string wire on the Farmers' line west from Highlanding and got within a mile and a half of Anton, where Mr. Farnum quit work, which will delay work until some time next week on that end of the line, but will make a start from Grygla Monday.—Eleven Towns.

HUNGRY OFFICE SEEKERS CLAMORING

The are Going Make Life Interesting for Governor Eberhart.

Take Charges to Bring About Removal of Officers.

St. Paul, Oct. 12—The commission appointed by the governor to have in charge the arrangements of the Johnson memorial at its first meeting decided that the minimum sum that it would be necessary to raise should be fixed at $25,000, which is little enough, and, if as originally proposed, both a statue at the state capitol and a monument at St. Peter are to be provided for, probably not sufficient. Indeed it is doubtful if an artist of the highest rank would undertake to produce the statue alone for much less than the sum mentioned and anything less than the best work is scarcely to be desired and would not be in keeping with its surroundings.

Men the State Should Honor.

Should such a statue be placed on one of the pedestals in front of the capitol building as proposed, it would direct needed attention to the fact that but little has been done in a public way to perpetuate the memory of the state's illustrious men. To erect a monument to Governor Johnson's memory there would have a tendency to make the public realize its neglect and remember what it owes to such men as Governor Ramsey, General Sibley, Governor Pillsbury, the great and good Bishop Whipple, C. K. Davis, William Windom, Ignatius Donnelly and others who took a scarcely less prominent part in making history for and shaping the destinies of the state. To provide fitting memorials to such men as these and at the same time embellish the state's capitol building is an object which is well worth while considering, especially in view of its educative value, and the benfits it would confer on posterity, whether it would not justify liberal appropriations by the state.

The Johnson Fund Grows.

Certainly it would meet public approval if the services of these pioneers were fresh in the people's memory, if we are to judge from the prompt and almost spontaneous response made to the suggestion of the creation of the Johnson Memorial fund. Although scarcely any systematic attempt has yet been made to collect the necessary funds, the receipt of considerably over $5000 has already been acknowledged by the St. Paul papers and there has probably by this time been paid into the various collecting agencies not less than $10,000. It is not thought that there will be any trouble in realizing the full amount required.

Moving Cautiously.

Governor Eberhart, Governor Johnson's successors, has been moving with commendable caution, and as I write has not yet even filled the position about to become vacant of executive clerk. His policy evidently will be to retain the men in office under the Johnson administration, and only to make changes where unavoidable vacancies occur. This is seen in the appointment of his military staff, all those who served under Governor Johnson having been retained. In the executive office the stenographers and messengers have been retained, and only those changes made rendered necessary by the resignations of Mr. Day and Harvey Grimmer.

Hungry Office Seekers Clamoring.

To do this the governor has had to resist considerable pressure, which will increase as the days go by, for I learn that a movement is on foot on behalf of those hungry for official spoils looking especially to changes in those departments which have large patronage, as the labor commissioner, the dairy commissioner, the fish and game commissioner and the office of oil inspector and boiler inspector. The pretense on which dismissals will be demanded in these departments is that the incumbents are offensive partisans, and to prove this trumped up charges will preferred against them. I am given to understand that this will be quite systematically done, and that the pressure will be all the harder to resist because it will be brought to bear by those who pretend to endorse the governor's policy of conducting the administration along lines laid down by his predecessor, and who, on that account, have already been given the governor's confidence. It remains to be seen whether the governor will have the firmness and courage to carry out the pledges he has made to the public.

The Democracy Ready for the Fray.

Considerable public interest is being shown in the choice the Democrats will make of a standard bearer. Even those Republicans most confident of success in the next campaign are beginning to realize the extent to which they are handicapped by the reactionary policy of the federal administration, which is openly denounced by the people and by practically every Republican newspaper in the state, and by the Republican party being split up into contending and apparently irreconciled factions. Torn by dissension, they now realize that they are confronted by a united party, having the prestige of five years of the most successful state administration Minnesota has ever enjoyed, and devoted to a national fiscal policy approved with practical unanimity by the people of the state.

Gubernatorial Timber.

Naturally under such circumstances there is considerable speculation as to whom the Democrats will nominate for governor. Lind and Hammond are the men most feared, but it is realized at the same time there are others who, unless the Republicans nominate a candidate with practically unanimity, might make a campaign with reasonable prospects of success. There is quite a galaxy of prominent and able men to choose from. There is Lawler of St. Paul, the only mayor of the city, who in more than a quarter of a century has had the courage to take the reins of government in his own hands and disregard the machine, amalgamated of Republican and Democratic bosses, who have flourished on city spoils and fattened at the public crib. There is Frank Day, admitted to be the most successful campaign manager of his generation. There is Rindahl of Crookston and Armson of Stillwater, both able men, possessing in a high degree the confidence of the people. In addition to these attention has recently been directed to the availability of Frederick W. Johnson of New Ulm, brother to the late governor, whose talents have only been obscured by Governor Johnson's greater prominence. Those who know say that Fred. Johnson is of gubernatorial size, that he is an effective speaker, an able campaigner and possesses many of those qualities which made Governor Johnson far and away the most popular man in the state. If not as a candidate for governor in some other position I expect to see him an important factor in the next campaign.

McCleary Again on Deck.

Apparently Mr. McCleary will not be less persistent in demanding that the public will do him justice than Bob Dunn. He seems to be still unsatisfied that he has had a square deal, and I learn that already he has been making a tour of the district with the ostensible purpose of looking after some land deals, but with the real object of impressing on his friends that he is the logical Republican candidate, and the only one who stands in with the administration. In this he is probably right. Other Helmuth Zaiser received a telegram Tuesday informing him that his uncle, E. L. Norton of St. Paul, died suddenly Tuesday morning. No particulars were received and the announcement of death came as a surprise for Mr. Norton was in Red Lake Falls last Saturday, apparently enjoying his usual health. All the information Mr. Zaiser received was that his uncle died at Waterville where he had gone to look after property interests.

L. C. Simons of St. Paul was greeting friends in the city this week. Mr. Simons was formerly engaged in business in Red Lake Falls. He is now cashier of the Twin City State Bank. Mr. Simons' bank was recently robbed, the robbers taking the last cent there was in the bank. There were fifty dollars worth of pennies and they took all of them, but that's all they did get for the gold, silver and currency was in the vaults and the vault was too strong for the charge of dynamite [illegible]

FIRST FOOT BALL GAME SATURDAY

Thief River Falls vs. Red Lake Falls on the Local Grounds.

Will Be Red Hot Game—Fight For Valley Championship Will Be Close.

The first football game of the season on the local grounds will be playld Saturday afternoon when the Thief River Falls and Red Lake Falls high school pig skin chasers will compete. It will be a good game. No doubt of that. And there is no doubt that it will be a hard fought battle. But it will be a nice clean game, though the teams are old rivals. There will be lots of rooting, of course, and your voice is needed, but the rooting, though noisy, will be impersonal. There is no reason why athletic relations between the two schools cannot be cordial. Care is being taken in the selection of officials and in making other arrangements and it is expected that no one will feel, after the game is over that he did not get a square deal.

Thief River Falls has played two games this season, losing to Crookston and winning from Fosston by close scores. In the only game of the season Red Lake Falls made a poor showing against Foston in the first half, owing no doubt to the fact that it was the first game of the season and the first in the experience of some of the players. In the second half, however, the Fosstonites were played off their feet. Fosston took the game by a close score. The records that the teams that are to play Saturday have made give promise of a good game Saturday and an interesting fight for the valley championship. Of course Red Lake Falls expects to take the game. The game will commence at 2:30 and it will cost 25 cents to see it. The local team will line up as follows:

Elmer Nelson and sister, Miss Olivia Nelson, from Hatton, N. D., were guests this week at the home of their aunt, Mrs. O. I. Tanberg. Mr. Nelson has returned to his home, but his sister will remain for a longer visit.

Several Candidates Are Suggested As Available for City Office.

Mayor Duffy Will be a Candidate for Reelelection.

The city election will be held Tuesday, Nov. 2, and already there are signs of political activity and many good men are suggested for public office. Mayor J. A. Duffy is to be a candidate for re-election and his petition is being circulated. Theo. Garceau has been suggested as a candidate for the office and his petition is also being circulased.

For the offices of aldermen at large there will probably be several candidates. Among those suggested are Jos. Salley and Theo. Majeras both of whom it is believed will get into the race. H. H. Hennings and there may be other candinates for the honor of representing the north side ward.

E. G. Buse is a candidate for the office of city treasurer. If there are other candidates for the office they have not yet become active and it is not known whether or not Mr. Emard will be a candidate for re-election.

THE GREAT WESTERN MANURE SPREADER

The man who invented the manure spreader certainly merits that honor. Of all the spreaders that have ever been brought out, we honestly believe that the Great Western Spreader has more good points and commendable characteristics than any that has ever been devised. It has heavy and large wood or iron wheels and wide track, front and rear endless apron, ratchet feed, entire oak frame, and is guaranteed to stand up under fifty per cent more strain and to require fifty per cent less repair than any other spreader built. It is the first and only spreader built to give entire satisfaction, not sometimes, but all the time.

NOLLED BY COURT

OFFICIAL ABSOLVED BY ATTORNEY GENERAL EXCEPT ONE COUNTY COMMISSIONER

IN THE BELTRAMI CASES

Was the Opinion of Attorney General Simpson—Commissioner Wright Arraigned on Road Contract Case.

Bemidji.—On the motion of Attorney General Simpson, which was concurred in by County Attorney Chester McKusick, just before adjournment, Judge Wright nolled the indictments which had been returned by a grand jury last June against County Auditor John Wilmann and Commissioners Wes Wright, F. O. Sibley and A. W. Danaher.

The indictments returned against County Auditor Wilmann were for not reporting certain fees received by him and for failing to follow the lawful directions of the public examiner. County Commissioners Wright, Sibley and Danaher were indicted for allowing a bill, which had not been fully itemized. The bill showed that work had been done by a team, indicating the number of days' work; but because it failed to state the kind of work done the grand jury saw fit to return true bills.

"If I were county attorney," said Mr. Simpson, "I would move to annul these indictments. Now, as attorney general, I do move that they be annulled. As to the county commissioners being indicted for failing to itemize the bill, I am free to say that if these hold good the members of every town board and city or village council of the state would be subject to indictments."

Mr. Simpson said that as a matter of public economy, owing to the condition of the county, these indictments should be annulled. Furthermore, he believed it was impossible to secure convictions.

Mr. Simpson stated that there was another indictment which had been returned at the same time to which he wished to call the attention of the court. If the allegations in that indictment were true, he said, they might constitute a crime.

Mr. Simpson then called for the arraignment of Wes. Wright, who appeared and asked that the matter be laid over a day.

The indictment against Mr. Wright charges that as county commissioner he was interested in a road contract entered into betwen the county of Beltrami and John W. Olson.

The indictments which are annulled and the one on which Mr. Wright was arraigned are the same which were given publicity in the twin cities thru information advanced by M. F. Kain, deputy public examiner, who testified before the grand jury.

The first case is that of W. H. McGrath, a lumberman, of Minneapolis, who sues for $10,000. The suits is directed against the First National bank, Ernest E. Park, a national Republican committeeman for Ohio, Benjamin Marks, a local capitalist whose name also figures in the Maybray indictments, Maybray himself and P. C. Connors, formerly cashier of the First National bank and now connected with the City National bank, of this city.

The other suit is brought against Benjamin Marks and Maybray, by P. E. George, of San Antonio, Texas. He charges that he lost his money in New Orleans, where, after losing $7,580 on a fake wrestling match he was induced to return home and secure $8,000 more which he also lost in a similar manner.

RALPH W. WHEELOCK

Appointed by Governor Eberhart as Day's Successor.

Minneapolis.—Ralph W. Wheelock of Minneapolis, has been named as private secretary to Governor Adolph O. Eberhart. He will succeed Frank A. Day, who will retire Nov. 1.

The choice of Mr. Wheelock was made at a conference in the office of A. A. Eberhart, Governor Eberhart's brother. Present at the conference were Governor Eberhart, Lieutenant Governor E. E. Smith, and other republican leaders.

Mr. Wheelock has been prominent in the fight for the private secretaryship from the start. After a conference in St. Paul last week, the place was offered first to Charles S. Mitchell of Duluth, with the understanding that Mr. Wheelock was to have the place should Mr. Mitchell refuse. After a talk with Robert C. Dunn, of Princeton, whose political manager Mr. Mitchell was in the Dunn-Johnson gubernatorial campaign, Mr. Mitchell decided that he would not accept the place. In this decision he followed Mr. Dunn's advice, and his own private wish not to re-enter politics. The decision of Mr. Mitchell made Mr. Wheelock's appointment a certainty.

Wheelock Best Man.

In announcing the appointment of Mr. Wheelock, Governor Eberhart said: "I have chosen Mr. Wheelock because I believe him to be the best man for the place. He is not entangled with any political faction, and has been allied with no political interest or interests."

Mr. Wheelock is now engaged in the advertising business in Minneapolis, but as a newspaper man he has worked on many of the twin city papers and before he came to Minneapolis conducted a newspaper in South Dakota. He was private secretary to Mayor David P. Jones, of Minneapolis.

St. Paul.—Harvey Grimmer has declined to be Governor Eberhart's executive clerk.

In a signed statement, Mr. Grimmer, who, although he is a Republican, has been a staunch supporter of the late Governor Johnson, says that Governor Eberhart asked him to remain as his executive clerk, but because of the light he had been placed in by certain members of the press, inference having been made that his acceptance of favors by the new governor would be construed as a surrender of loyalty to the memory of one to whom he was so close, he thinks it is his duty to retire.

TAX LEVY DROPS HALF MILL.

State Funding Tax Levy Has Come to an End.

St. Paul.—Notices were sent to the county auditors by State Auditor S. G. Iverson directing them to make the tax levy for state purposes for the coming year 2.8 mills. Last year it was 3.33 mills. The decrease is due partly to the wiping out of the $600,000 road and bridge bill, partly to the increased valuation of personal property and partly to the increased revenues from special taxes. The tax levy of 2.8 mills on a total valuation of $1,100,000,000 will bring approximately $3,000,000 into the state treasury to be divided among the various funds.

The rate in mills for last year and this year for each fund is as follows:

	1909	1908
Revenue	1.00	1.50
Soldiers' relief	.10	.10
Funding tax fund	0.00	.20
State road and bridge fund	.05	.05
University campus fund	.17	.15
Prison building fund	.25	0.00
State school and university	1.23	1.23
Total	2.80	3.33

The funding tax levy, which has been made for a long term of years, has come to an end. This fund was used to pay the old railroad bonds issued by the state in 1858. There is still $140,000 of these bonds outstanding, but there is enough money in sight for this fund to pay this amount. The prison building fund is the new item added to the list of funds for which a levy is made.

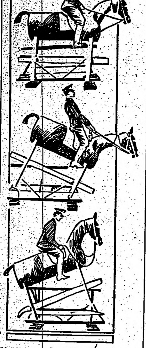
LEARN RIDING ON A HOBBY

The Pul[illegible] British Soldier Gets His Training on Ingeniously Devised Dummy.

New York.—A new method has just been devised by officers of the British army for teaching the raw cavalry recruit how to ride. This is neither more nor less than a collapsible horse, through which all the real motions of the real horse in galloping, hurdling and trotting, as well as neck motion, can be well imitated.



Hobby Horse on Which British "Rookies" Learn to Ride.

The device has been established at the army riding school at Woolwich, and has been found of great service in practice. There are six principal parts of instruction on the hobby horse, with and without using the reins.

The first directions include instruction in how to rise to the hurdle, the position to be retained as the horse takes the hurdle, and that to be held in landing after the horse has taken the hurdle, all three with use of the reins. Then there is instruction, in all three, without the use of the reins.

The hobby horse's throat works on a hinge, and is connected with the nose by pulleys and weights, so that when the dummy is in motion the action of the bending and stretching of a horse's neck is represented.

GALLANT DEEDS OF TWO GREAT WAR CAPTAINS

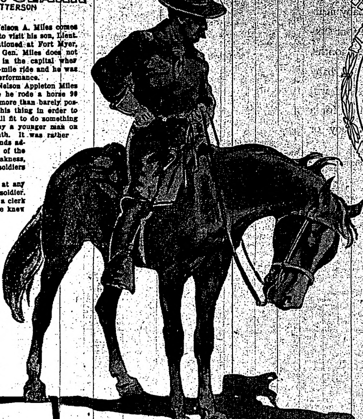
By EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT 1909 BY W.A. PATTERSON

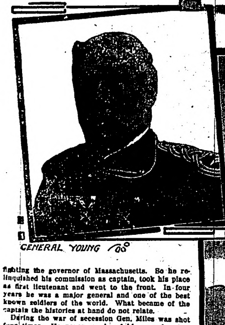
WASHINGTON.—Lieut.-Gen. Nelson A. Miles comes to Washington at intervals to visit his son, Lieut. Sherman Miles, who is stationed at Fort Myer, just across the Potomac. Gen. Miles does not show his years. He was in the capital when Mr. Roosevelt made his 100-mile ride and he was deeply interested in the performance.

Just before Lieut.-Gen. Nelson Appleton Miles retired from active service he rode a horse 90 miles in nine hours. It is more than barely possible that Gen. Miles did this thing in order to show that at 64 he was still fit to do something which would have put many a younger man on the sick report for a month. It was rather a spectacular feat. Miles' friends admit that he is a little fond of the spectacular. It is a weakness, a minor weakness, of a strong man and of one of the finest soldiers that America ever produced.

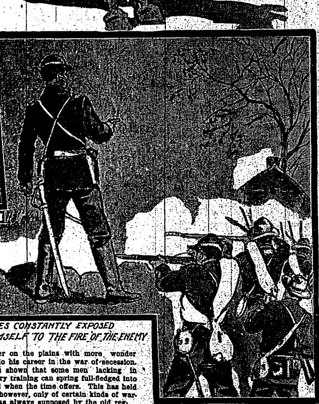
There is no parallel—no exact parallel at any rate—to the career of this Massachusetts soldier. In 1861, when he was 21 years old he was a clerk in a Washington street store, Boston. He knew absolutely nothing about military affairs save what he had learned from taking a few "drill lessons" from an old French soldier named Calignac. Miles' father, a fairly prosperous farmer, had given him $1,000 in cash. The boy promptly spent it in the work of raising a company of men whose services he intended to offer to the government. He raised his company and was made its captain, as he should have been. Promptly the governor of Massachusetts told Miles he was too young to command a company and that he must give way to another man and take the place of first lieutenant.



GENERAL NELSON A. MILES



GENERAL YOUNG '08



MILES CONSTANTLY EXPOSED HIMSELF TO THE FIRE OF THE ENEMY

As some one else has put it, Miles concluded that he was in the military business for the purpose of fighting confederate soldiers and not for the purpose of fighting the governor of Massachusetts. So he relinquished his commission as captain, took his place as first lieutenant and went to the front. In four years he was a major general and one of the best known soldiers of the world. What became of the captain the histories at hand do not relate.

During the war of secession Gen. Miles was shot four times. He never speaks of his wounds. Not one person in a hundred knows that he ever received a scratch, yet one of the bullets that reached him nearly ended his soldier life. It was at Chancellorsville that Miles received the wound that the surgeon said would kill him. He fooled the surgeons, got well and received a medal of honor from congress for conspicuous gallantry on the field of battle, and with the medal came a commission which gave him the right to wear a star in his shoulder knot.

On that day at Chancellorsville, Miles was holding a line of abattis and rifle pits against a tremendous force of the enemy. He was in command of the skirmish line in front of the first division of the Second Army corps. In order to hearten his men Miles constantly exposed himself to the fire of the enemy. He stood upright in the open, courting bullets and possible death. The confederates couldn't hit him for a long time. The inspiration of his conduct enabled his men to hold their ground long after it seemed certain that the enemy would drive them back. Finally, a bullet found its mark, and Miles went down with a wound that ranged downward through his body into his thigh, producing an injury that made the surgeons say "death," but nevertheless, death did not come.

At the battle of Fredericksburg, Miles was shot in the throat. It was a jagged wound that bled profusely and caused great pain. He was ordered to go to the rear. The order came from a superior, and so, soldierlike, Miles obeyed, though he didn't want to go. At the time of the Fredericksburg fight Miles already had won considerable fame as a soldier. He was known to all the generals of the service. While on his way to the hospital he came up with Gen. Hancock.

Miles put his hand to his throat so that Hancock wouldn't know he was wounded. At the front was a stone wall, behind which a force of the enemy was located. This force was doing great damage to the unionists. Miles pointed to the wall and told Hancock that a well-directed charge would take it, and then he said: "General, I want to lead the charge."

Hancock knew courage when he saw it, but he also knew a wounded man when he saw one. He made Miles go to the rear, because of his condition, but he took good care that his courage was made a matter of mention.

It is probable that military men regard Gen. Miles' career on the plains with more wonder than they do his career in the war of secession. History has shown that some men lacking in early military training can spring full-fledged into warriorhood when the time offers. This has held to be true, however, only of certain kinds of warfare. It was always supposed by the old regulars that no soldier could make a successful Indian fighter until he had been for years on the plains and had learned the ways of the savage. Miles went through six great Indian campaigns, and carried every one of them to success. He was one of the greatest Indian fighters of American history.

Not many years after the civil war the Cheyennes, the Arapahoes, the Kiowas and the Comanches formed a league and raided the frontier. Miles went after them. It was his first great Indian engagement. He completely smashed the reds in a hard, driving, fighting campaign. He did that which was prophesied he could not do, and he did it so effectively that these warlike plains Indians never again took the warpath.

Later, Gen. Miles took up the trail of Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse, with the Fifth infantry, and a few companies of the Twenty-second infantry. Crook and Terry had accomplished comparatively nothing against the bands of these chiefs, but Miles followed them relentlessly with his handful of men, fought them victoriously time after time, and finally captured 2,000 of them and sent them into the agencies.

It was Gen. Miles who overcame the greatest Indian general who ever fought west of the Mississippi river—Chief Joseph of the Nez Perces. It was Miles who broke the power of the Apaches, and it was Miles who made the Bannocks and the Minneconjous sue for peace. This clerk who became a soldier, battled for peace on the frontier, and won his battle.

Lieut. Gen. Miles loves gold braid and the shiniest of shiny gold buttons. Again, it is the one weakness of a great American soldier.

Gen. Young's Great Record.

Another retired lieutenant general, Samuel Baldwin Marks Young, has a name long enough, but not nearly so long as his army record. Gen. Young has served in every rank known to the military organization, barring only that of general, a rank which stands by itself and which stands in the American service by only a few men. When he was a boy Lieut. Gen. Young was a private of volunteers. He was as proud when he was made a corporal as he was on that day five years ago, when his commission as lieutenant general of the army of the United States was signed by Theodore Roosevelt who had fought on the Cuban battlefields under the eye of the man he was commissioning.

It took Gen. Young only six months to reach the grade of captain. He was given the command of a troop of the Fourth Pennsylvania cavalry, and his liking for the mounted service was such that he stayed in the saddle all through his career as a regular. The general served four years with the Pennsylvania volunteer cavalry, and before he left its ranks he had led it in battle as its commanding officer. In every fight from that at Mechanicsville to the skirmish which preceded the surrender at Appomattox, the Pennsylvania soldier had a part.

Only one or two officers in the United States service received more brevet commissions for gallantry in action than did Gen. Young. The list is a long one, and it includes recognition for gallant and meritorious services at the Battle of Sulphur Springs, Amelia Spring, Sailors Creek and a final brevet as brigadier general for gallant and meritorious service during the campaign terminating with the surrender of the insurgent army under Gen. Robert E. Lee.

At the battle of Gaines Mills, Young's squadron of the Fourth cavalry was cut off from the rest of the command by a large force of the enemy. He ordered his men to dismount and to fight on foot.

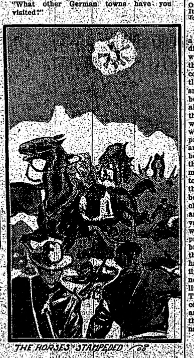
They were holding off an apparently overwhelming force, when a bullet struck the major—that was Young's rank at the time—in the elbow, shattering the bone. He kept on fighting, but finally the surgeons made him submit to first-aid-to-the-injured treatment.

While they were at it, the horses of the squadron, the men being dismounted, stampeded and went through the line, doing much damage with their heels. Wounded as he was, Maj. Young succeeded in keeping up the heart of his troopers, who now had no means of escape from the tremendous force at their front, except their own legs, and he succeeded in holding them to their duty until they were enabled to draw off in something like order. If one wishes to get an idea of the hell of war let him know that on that day the losses of Maj. Young's command were 80 per cent. of the men engaged.

A writer in the Washington Herald sometime ago told a story of Gen. Young at the time that he was in Germany, on assignment from the war department, to watch the maneuvers of Kaiser William's army. It seems that the general on his way to Berlin had stopped for a day at Dresden, and while there he was told that it would not do to let Emperor William know that he had made a visit to any town in Germany before paying his respects to the kaiser at the capital. The general met the emperor, and as the newspaper writer has it, the first question the emperor put was: "Is this the first place in Germany you have visited?"

The general was startled by the suddenness of the attack and he blurted: "Oh, no, your majesty!"

"Indeed," said the emperor, surprised. "What other German towns have you visited?"



THE HORSES STAMPEDED '08

By this time Gen. Young had pulled himself together, and he said quickly: "I have visited Chicago and Cincinnati." The emperor roared and went over and shared the joke with the empress.

When Young came out of the civil war he dropped his brigadier generalship of volunteers for a second lieutenancy of regulars. At the beginning of the Spanish-American war Gen. Young was sent to Cuba as a brigadier general.

Prior to the outbreak of the war Theodore Roosevelt had said to Gen. Young that he would like to go to the front with the cavalrymen—to the real front, where there were bullets flying.

After the battle of Las Guasimas, the man who afterward became president of the United States, came up to Gen. Young with a look of joy all over his face, held out his hand and said: "By George, general, you certainly made good on those bullets."

Yellow fever laid its hand on Gen. Young in Cuba. As soon as he had recovered he went to the Philippines and was there in active service in the field for several years. He succeeded Gen. Miles as chief of the general staff and as lieutenant general of the army. He retired from the service about four years ago, after having followed the flag for 43 years.

TALL MAN HAS MANY WOES

Life Is by No Means a Bed of Roses to Him Who Towers Above His Fellows.

If the little man is very witty he will ask the big man if it is cold up there. The tall man, usually having a kind heart, will try to smile at this original question, but should his heart ever become hardened or his sense of humor dulled he will [illegible] that his size forbids him hitting the little man.

The short man never seems quite able to understand the tall man. He can't make out why the tall man doesn't become a policeman. [illegible]

The tall man has his troubles wherever he goes. The stout man's waistcoat is capable of a few inches of play in the event of a narrow doorway, but when an entrance is low it is up to the tall man to stoop or take a crack on the head. It is in cases like the latter that the short man seems to find a certain irresistible humor. He enjoys a more or less noisy snicker while the tall man removes the dint from his hat.

Some wonder why the tall man seldom has the nerve of his shorter brother. He doesn't need it. If these people would take an 18-inch stool some time when there is a crowd and stand on it they would find out that at an elevation of six foot three there is quite enough prominence even if [illegible] you keep quiet. It isn't necessary to attract very much attention.

The tall man is popularly supposed to have the advantage over other men when he's in love. It is certainly true he prefers the girl who measures about five feet. It may safely be said that the tall man usually has to stoop to conquer.

The tall man's day is no worse than his nights. The medium man goes to bed, stretches himself and falls asleep. The tall man can't do this—the bed [illegible] must be a kink somewhere for a protruding foot and a cold next day. All of which goes to prove that the tall man's life is not exactly a bed of roses, and if it was he wouldn't be able to sleep in it half as comfortably as the average man could.

The KITCHEN CABINET

WHAT might be done if men were wise;
What glorious deeds my suffering brother?
Would they unite in love and right
And cease their scorn of one another.
—Charles Mackay.

We were all brought up under the old adage: "A stitch in time saves nine," but how heedless have we become. The girl or woman who finds the hook loose, the button gone or the braid ripped and immediately puts in the needed stitch, thankfully puts on the garment feeling well dressed.

On ironing day it is a good plan to put all garments needing mending on one side of the rack so that nothing may be put away overlooked. A still better plan is to make all repairs before sending to the laundry, as they usually become worse after passing through the washing. Hosiery, of course, is preferably darned after washing.

Shoe heels may be the means of much destruction to fine petticoats of lace and embroidery. See that the corners of the heels are trimmed and avoid being tripped or being mortified with a dangling piece of lace. A handy little convenience that may save many a disturbed moment is a cushion containing a few needles threaded, of different kinds of thread, and silk, hung where one may reach it easily when dressing. These threaded needles are real temper savers. Try them.

One of the valuable talks given us as college girls was one which has proved invaluable in ordinary daily life; it is this: Decide the night before what you are to wear the following day (if you are a business woman this is invaluable advice), lay out the garments, see that there is nothing to repair, and in the morning you will be ready for a busy day with the satisfied feeling of a well dressed woman, unhurried and happy.

Home Ideas.

To keep a thick frosting in place bind the cake with a wide band of greased paper, pin it closely, then put on the frosting as thick as desired. Two or three colors may be used easily by putting it on this way after each layer hardens.

A pair of shears in the kitchen to use for cutting raisins will be found very useful. The raisins are never as pasty as when chopped.

THEN take joy home and let her sing to thee
When thou art working in the furrows—aye
Or weeding in the sacred hour of dawn.
It is a comely fashion to be glad:
Joy is the grace we sing to God."

Elbert Hubbard said: "Happiness is a habit; cultivate it." Dispositions differ we know, but there are none who may not be improved by taking the right view of things. Turn up the corners of the mouth and laugh a little. It will make everything go smoother. A cheerful view of life can be cultivated and the meal times when all the family are gathered should be the happiest, merriest time of the whole day. It belongs to the housewife to see that the meal is properly prepared; but accidents will happen and instead of making all miserable because the steak is burned, promise them something better for the next meal and bring something of interest to talk about, so that all may forget the unpleasant things. Children may be taught early to contribute to the cheer and information of the family, and such training is of inestimable value in later life. A child that is always curbed and never allowed to express himself is not likely to make a brilliant talker when he goes out into the world. Let them feel that they have a part and are a part of the family. This does not mean that they need monopolize the conversation for little people are porne to do that. They may be taught deference and consideration for others more by example than precept. If the rights of the child are respected, he will most naturally respect the rights of others.

TRIFLES.

"Trifles make perfection, but perfection is no trifle."

It is the daily little things that make up character.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
When life flows by like a song.
But the woman worth while is the one who will smile
When everything goes dead wrong.

To make a marshmallow frosting, cut the mallows into four pieces with shears and drop them into the boiled frosting while beating it, after having poured it over the egg.

Baby's "High Treason."

A little five-year-old girl was arrested recently for an "act of high treason" at Brad, in Transylvania, for having worn a tri-colored hair ribbon and sash—the national colors of Roumania. The child was out walking with her nurse when a policeman took her into custody. She was brought before a magistrate, who said by wearing the Roumanian colors the child was guilty of inciting the populace against the Hungarian state. Her father was fined $20, sentenced to five days' imprisonment and dismissed from his post in the civil service, and the mother and the nurse who had tied on the offending sash and ribbon were also fined and imprisoned.

Feeding Farm Hands.

Every farmer's wife knows what tremendous appetites farm hands usually have; but while they eat well they work well, too.

Here's a good suggestion about feeding farm hands. Give them plenty of Quaker Oats. A big dish of Quaker Oats porridge with sugar and cream or milk is the greatest breakfast in the world for a man who needs vigor and strength for a long day's work. The man that eats Quaker Oats plentifully and often is the man who does good work without excessive fatigue. There is a sustaining quality in Quaker Oats not found in other foods, and for economy it is at the head of the list. Besides the regular size packages Quaker Oats is packed in large size family packages, with and without china. 5

On a Time Limitation.

In spite of the reputation for latitudinarianism he gained from his early trial for heresy, the late Prof. Jowett of Oxford was intolerant of pretentiousness and shallow conceit. One self-satisfied undergraduate met the master one day. "Master," he said, "I have searched everywhere in all philosophies, ancient and modern, and nowhere do I find the evidence of a God." "Mr. ——," replied the master, after a shorter pause than usual, "if you don't find a God by five o'clock this afternoon you must leave this college."

Come Home, Mother.

Mother, dear mother, come home from the club, and rustle some supper for me; 'tis time you were here working over the grub and getting things ready for tea. The table's not set nor the teakettle boiled, the vegetables are not prepared; no wonder my temper and feelings are roiled, though 'tis doubtful, indeed, if you cared. Come home, come home, come ho-ho-home! Yes, cut your symposium down a wee bit, dear mother, and hustle right home!—Los Angeles Express.

Guess Where She Is From.

The head of the house had been ill for many months, and had lost his appetite entirely.

"I can't seem to fix anything that he'll enjoy and he hardly eats anything," the mistress was saying to the maid, who was a new arrival from the old country.

"That's always the way," returned the girl. "They're all the same, them invalids. All they want is nothing at all, and then when you bring it to them they don't eat it."

Summer Conquests.

"Are these all photographs of fellows you have been engaged to?"

"No. They're the fellows who didn't propose."

"What in the world do you want of them?"

"Why; I am saving them to make a rogues' gallery."

The Minority Position.

CHILDREN SHOWED IT
Effect of Their Warm Drink in the Morning.

A year ago I was a wreck from coffee drinking and was on the point of giving up my position in the school room because of nervousness.

"I was telling a friend about it and she said, 'We drink nothing at meal time but Postum, and it is such a comfort to have something we can enjoy drinking with the children.'

"I was astonished that she would allow the children to drink any kind of coffee, but she said Postum was the most healthful drink in the world for children as well as for older ones, and that the condition of both the children and adults showed that to be a fact.

"My first trial was a failure. The cook boiled it four or five minutes and it tasted so flat that I was in despair but determined to give it one more trial. This time we followed the directions and boiled it fifteen minutes after the boiling began. It was a decided success and I was completely won by its rich delicious flavour. In a short time I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and kept growing better month after month, until now I am perfectly healthy, and do my work in the school room with ease and pleasure. I would not return to the nerve-destroying regular coffee for any money."

James T. McCleary wants to run for congress again. Mac evidently doesn't want Bryan to have anything on him in the number of defeats.

Speaker Cannon is accused of being in collusion with Tammany. The public is prepared to believe almost anything of either Cannon or Tammany.

It was a mistake in congress to admit ivory tusks free of duty. The disgusted householder is apt to throw some of them at the head of his congressman.

The person who believes the dove of peace is hovering in the vicinity of the Republican party has evidently mistaken the character of the noise coming from the direction of Princeton.

A Little Falls widow, whose husband has been dead twenty days, is again a bride. Probably she wanted to show the Lord she could get 'em as fast as He could take 'em away.

Thief River Falls is going to get out of Red Lake county according to the News. However we are assured that there is no intention of seceding from Minnesota or the United States.

Many newspapers have given currency to the statement that Ralph Wheelock's appointment as private secretary establishes a precedent, inasmuch as he comes from outside the ranks of active politicans. This is hardly fair to Ralph, for no doubt he has all along been under the impression that he is a politician, and an active one at that.

The Anoka Union admonishes the new governor to beware of Democratic advice. As a matter of fact if Governor Eberhart takes all Republican advice proffered he will have plenty of trouble.

The committee in charge of the Governor Johnson memorial fund has fixed the limit to be raised at $25,000, and already about $12,000 is in sight. It is thought that no trouble will be experienced in raising the full amount by November 1.

The Northfield News belabors Governor Eberhart for allowing the Johnson appointees to remain in office. We suspect the secret of Joel Heatwole's sudden interest in turning Democrats out of office is a desire to embarass the new governor as much as possible.

Governor Eberhart's advocacy of a million dollar office building for housing the overflow from the state capitol may tickle the St. Paul boomers, but the hard headed farmer of Red Lake county is apt to wonder if all this additional expense is necessary.

A significant change in the progress of events is the fact that there is no longer a thick and thin party orgain among the larger dailies of the state. And it is better for the newspapers, and better for the people, It is impossible to place confidence in a newspaper that deals with public questions along the line of party expediency.

For the benefit of those who either have forgotten or never knew it might be well to remark that Senator Sageng and all the other state senators are prevented by reason of legislative inhibition from being candidates for governor next year. But they can run for congress, and if Ole gets through plowing in time he is likely to be after the scalp of one Halvor Steenerson.

Now that Governor Johnson is eliminated as a candidate, the Republican aspirants are coming forward at a lively rate. The pre-convention fight promises to be breezy and bitter and the sore spots will be so numerous that the party will be in poor condition to make a winning fight, especially if the Democrats find the right kind of a candidate.

State Superintendent C. G. Schulz has announced the annual distribution of state aid to high and graded schools. The total amount distributed is $468,482. In all 210 high schools and 151 graded schools participate, the high schools receiving $1 750 and the graded schools $60 each. An additional $500 is given to fifteen high schools as special aid. This is the first time in fifteen years that the schools of the state have received the full amount of the state aid authorized them under the law.

Minnesota has no lieutenant governor, and it is said that Senator Smith will not take the oath, because he voted for an increased salary for that office. Under the constitution this makes him ineligible. In the event that Governor Eberhart should resign or die it is likely the state senate would convene and elect Senator French president pro tem in order that he could be in the line of succession, Senator Frencr was elected to fill a vacancy aftea the salary bills were passed, and is the only senator eligible to hold either the office of governor or lieutenant governor.

The Minneapolis Star states on the authority of travling men who were in that place that at Madison, no attempt was made to show its sorrow over the death of Gov. Johnson, says the St. Cloud Times. While in almost every town, hamlet, village and city, memorial services were being held on the afternoon of the funeral, Madison paid no heed, and "funeral decorations were conspicuous by their absence." Asked for an explanation, the travling men were informed that Madison, as the home of J. F. Jacobson, the republican candidate for governor who was defeated by Governor Johnson last fall, was not officially recognizing the demise of the man who defeated the town's popular idol at the polls. We are loth to believe that the people of Madison, "with malice aforethought," should exhibit so spiteful, vengeful and unchristian spirit. It needs confirmation.

candidates mentioned do not openly advocate Republican policies as defined in Taft's Winona speech. The president would probably dub them near-Democrats, for that is what they are. They can't very well serve two masters. They must either swallow Republican policies or act in Congress with the Democrats. In the latter event a Republican would have even less influence with the administration than a Democrat, as witness Representative Davis of the Third District who has ben banished from the councils of his party in Washington and considers himself fortunate to be allowed an occasional crumb of patronage or influence.

Other Candidates.

Still another candidate for the Republican nomination has appeared in the Second District in the person of Frank Ellsworth of St. James, the county attorney of Watonwan County, who is backed by Representative Swendsen. If both or either decide to make a fight for the nomination, that will put a quietus upon State Treasurer Dinehart's congressional aspirations, for these are understood to have been predicated upon his receiving a unanimous nomination. It is understood that he regards a fight for the nomination as likely to prove fatal to any prospects of election he might otherwise have, and he has no notion in the world of cutting short a promising political career by courting defeat at this time. Rather he will stand pat, accept the treasureship another term, or be in such a position to accept the plum of a gubernatorial nomination if it should chance to fall at his feet, which is now admitted to be within the possiblities.

Fixing Up a Slate.

The state capitol crowd are rather pleased than otherwise to see Dinehart out of the congressional race. It is no secret that the wheel horses there are pulling the wires which they hope will result in few changes being made in the positions filled by the present incumbents. The governor himself has not yet aligned himself with them but the activities of Attorney General Simpson who has assumed leadership, predicating it on the influence of the interests whose confidence he enjoys, are all in the direction of having everything fixed up so that when the convention meets there will be no hitch in the program. In this he has the co-operation of Senator Smith, who is understood to be very close to the governor, and who expects to find a facile agent in Private Secretary Wheelock, whose appointment he advised. The nomination for the treasureship, in view of Mr. Dinehart's anticipated congressional candidacy, was giving them some trouble and they are well enough satisfied to have it settled by Mr. Dinehart's willingness to retain that position.

The Machine Program.

In this they are counting on such a successful outcome of the Eberhart administration that Dunn will not consider the time [illegible] for injecting his candidacy into the campaign but will ultimately decide to wait two, possibly four years more [illegible] will be reached with the temperance people that they will not assume the aggressive, and that no one will think it worth while to raise the tonnage tax issue. They look upon the peace that at present broods over the situation as here to stay.

Disturbing Elements.

There are some, however, who regard it as ominous—the lull before the storm. Even Governor Eberhart's reluctance to make appointments is considered as an element of dissatisfaction, and they ask if it takes him a month to decide who is going to be his executive clerk, how long is it going to take him to make up his mind when ten thousand hungry applicants are clamoring for the thousand places he will have to fill. These things tell with the practical politicians, and even Senator Smith is said to gravely shake his head when they are mentioned. In the meantime the friends of E. T. Young are keeping close tab on events and only await the psychological moment to spring his name as the logical candidate of the progressive Republicans of the state, and the standard bearer of those opposed to the surrender of the Republican organization to the uses of the agents of corporations, which they allege have now openly assumed its control.
